OUR HIGHWAYS.

WHEN I walk out on the broad highway
To take the air on a pleasant day,
I have to step on so much muck
And pick my way through so much truck,
That all my pleasure flies away
When I walk out on a pleasant day.

Ice cream spoons and candy bags,
Strings and boxes and dirty rags,
Daily papers and movie sheets
Are thrown on pavements, gutters and streets;
So all my pleasure is taken away
When I walk out on a pleasant day.

—R. G. E. S.

WHEN I walk out on the broad highway,
To take the air on a pleasant day,
I have to skip and dodge and duck
The speeding car and heavy truck,
Till all my pleasure flies away,
When I walk out on a pleasant day.

TOO TRUE.

The time is approaching when a pedestrian will be a curiosity. Legs will be used only for stepping on the gas and baby's first step will be from the baby buggy to the Ford.

Walking will be a lost art and the automobile in time will give way to the airplane and the future race will be equipped with wings instead of legs.

We gather from the criticisms that the Countess of Catheart's play, "Ashes of Love," will shortly be relegated to the ashcan. It is so full of clinkers that it won't draw.

"Calles Has Influenza." Serves him right.

EMPTY POCKETS.

A man in East St. Louis woke up the other morning and found a burglar making off with his trousers containing $50. He found the trousers in a neighbor's back yard minus the fifty berries.

IN the fell clutch of circumstance
When he could not escape with both
He took the cash and left the pants
Although to leave them he was loath.

GOOD WORK.

See where the Cardinals are going to eat on the American plan, while on the road this summer. That's one way to make 'em crowd the plate.

The Robins were in such miserable spring shape that all they could do was trim the Browns four out of five.

Poland and Brazil had better get a minor league reputation before trying to butt into the big league.

"Boston Newspapers Praise Missouri's Survey of Crime." Well, we had the material to work on.

BOLD OPERATIONS OF BIG CLEVELAND ALCOHOL RING ARE AT LAST REVEALED

Syndicate in Two Years Distributed More Than 2,000,000 Gallons of Pure Grain Alcohol.

SOLD ONLY IN CAR LOAD LOTS

Indictments Against 112 Persons, 60 More Expected — Similar Situation in Other Cities.

By PAUL Y. ANDERSON,
A Staff Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

CLEVELAND, O., March 20.—In two years a single vast syndicate distributed throughout the United States more than 2,000,000 gallons of pure grain alcohol to be made into bootleg liquor, as shown by the evidence upon which 112 persons have just been indicted here. At least 60 more will be indicted within a few days, United States District Attorney A. E. Bersteen said today.

Scrutinizing the facts discloses the old familiar story of a huge organization systematically planned to take advantage of the conditions created by the Volstead act and reap the huge profits possible through the successful violation of that law. The names are new; so are some of the places. The commodity was limited strictly to alcohol, the scheme was distinctly shrewd, and successful operations continued over a long period of time. Otherwise, the general terms of the alleged conspiracy are terms with which the public has long since grown familiar.

Usual Corruption Encountered.

We encounter here the usual corruption of Federal officials and police, the customary collusion of railroad employes, warehouse and trucking companies, the never-ending tale of double-crossing and grating, the old story of hard men made reckless by rich rewards and of good men succumbing to unprecedented temptations, and last of all, the inevitable murder. It is the same repulsive, desperate, somber and bloody picture that has been faced in turn by the people of Chicago, Cincinnati, St. Louis, New York, Philadelphia, Jersey City, Savannah, Baltimore, San Francisco and a host of the larger cities of the country since prohibition became a law.

Nevertheless, this case has peculiar and distinguishing aspects, whose unusual interest warrants closer description. The indicted persons have yet to be tried, hence their guilt must not be taken for granted. The following narrative comprises a recital of what the Government expects to prove when the largest conspiracy case in the history of the Federal Courts goes to trial:

A small, compact, central group, headed by four millionaires, supplied the alcohol and guaranteed delivery to points within a radius of 400 miles of Cleveland, or money refunded. It sold nothing less than a carload lot, consisting of 600 gallons. Its sales were made to local "rings" in numerous cities, which, in turn, either divided each carload between their members or retailed the alcohol to smaller dealers.

Shipments to 16 Cities.

Shipments have thus far been traced to 16 cities, scattered all the way from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and including St. Louis. Cleveland was the keystone in the structure, although the financial headquarters was in Philadelphia, and most of the alcohol originated in Pennsylvania. The price to the various city "rings" was $3 a gallon if purchased in lots of 10,000 gallons or more and $5 to $6 a gallon in lots down to 5000 gallons, which was the smallest order accepted.

The alcohol eventually was sold to individual consumers, either in that form, or in the form of synthetic gin and whisky, at prices ranging from $10 to $50 a gallon, originally cost about 50 cents a gallon.

At the core of the system were two sets of brothers, known as the "big four." They were Abe and Dave Gersonstein and Frank and Sam Fogel, all of Philadelphia, and all now reported to be millionaires. All four employed the names of Simons, Clark and Wolfe. The Gerosnteins also went by the name of Gerson, and the Fogels

IN PRISON 12 YEARS FOR 'KILLING' A MAN WHO WAS NOT DEAD

Police Forced Two to Confess Murder, But Supposed Victim Turns Up Alive.

Copyright, 1926, by the Press and Pulitzer Publishing Cos. (New York World and Post-Dispatch.)

PARIS, March 20.—Inhabitants of a village across the Spanish frontier were thrown into a panic the other day when they saw swinging down the lane one whom they had known but who everyone thought had been dead 12 years. "Grimaldos," they called, "Is it you?" They crossed themselves and fled as if they had seen a ghost.

Grimaldos was a young shepherd. In 1914 he was murdered, so everyone thought. Two peasants were convicted of the crime, on their own confessions, and sentenced to life imprisonment.

But Grimaldos was not dead. He laughed when someone plucked up enough courage to ask him why. He explained that he had merely crossed the frontier and worked in France, where wages were better. His two supposed murderers were released and joined in the village festivities. They said their confession had been forced from them by bullying police. As the body could not be found, they invented a story of having fed it to pigs.

WOMAN MAYOR-ELECT STARTS CLEAN-UP DRIVE ON BARBERS

Suggests Customers' Slogan be "Every Barber Shop Patron His Own Policeman."

By the Associated Press.

SEATTLE, Wash., March 20.—Mrs. Bertha K. Landes, mayor-elect who made campaign promises that she would clean up Seattle, started today on barber shops. Receiving reports that barber shops were not observing a law requiring that scissors, razors and clippers be sterilized each time they are used, Mrs. Landes suggested that customers see that it is done. "Every barber shop patron his own policeman," was the slogan adopted at her instance.

OFFICIAL MISTAKEN FOR WAITER

French Under Secretary Wore Plain Evening Clothes.

By the Associated Press.

PARIS, March 20.—The old joke about American Ambassador being taken for a head waiter at a court function because of the contrast of his plain evening clothes with the brilliant uniforms about him, has been perpetrated again, but with a French Minister as the victim.

Georges Chauvin, who was Under Secretary of State for the Liberated Regions in the eighth Briand Cabinet went to Elysee palace recently in evening clothes which are said to date from his student days. Once in the French white house he took a standing pose by the buffet, where the incident happened. "Maitre d'Hotel," queried a much-diamonded lady of high Paris society, "would you mind fetching me a glass of champagne?"

M. Briand, M. Chauvin's chief, himself no Beau Brummel, was the first to laugh at his subordinate's misadventure.

WISH FOR SIMPLE FUNERAL SERVICE BY COL. COOLIDGE IS CARRIED OUT

President's Father Buried in Hillside Grave After Brief Ceremony in Home —Casket Put on Sleigh.

WREATH FROM SON AMONG FLOWERS

Executive Asks That Coffin Be Opened at Cemetery for Last Look at Father —Governor Present.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

PLYMOUTH, Vt., March 20.—President Coolidge stood in the drifted snow this afternoon and saw the body of his father lowered into a frozen terrace of the hillside Plymouth graveyard, while a storm swept down from surrounding mountains.

His head bared and with his family and close friends about him, he gazed at the coffin which held the body of Col. John Calvin Coolige and then off at the familiar hills, as the Rev. John White, visiting pastor of the village church pronounced the simple Episcopalian committal service.

The burial and service at the home which preceded it, were in all, what one might have wintessed in any rural community of the Vermont Mountains that had been touched by death. They were simple as the old Colonel's life had been plain. Pomp and ceremony, which the President might have commanded, and which many, in fact, wished to give to the final rites, were lacking.

No Show of Pomp.

Word was sent to those in Washington arranging a Congressional delegation that it would be more in keeping with the occasion for the President's father to be consigned to his final sleep without any show of magnificence. There was not even music. Flowers were banked about the bier and the President's mass of white lilies lay across the coffin, with a companion piece of lilies from neighbors of the village. A detail of state guard infantry acted as pallbearers, but there were no hymns, no procession and none of the ostentation of an elaborate ceremony.

The friends of Col. Coolidge who came to his funeral, some of them making part of the journey on snowshoes, did not give expression to their sorrow with tears, nor did the President. The Vermont mountain people are not accustomed to give visible signs of their grief. Mr. Coolidge's countenance was sad, but contained. There was no sobbing at the home or cemetery.

All realized that the old Colonel in his 80 years had lived his span, and felt that he had obtained needed rest from his long illness and suffering.

Coffin Is Opened

Just before the body was lowered into its grave, President Coolidge had the aperture in the coffin opened for a last look at his father before the body was consigned to the earth. The President glanced for just an instant at the peaceful face, emaciated by illness, and then had the covering replaced. The incident was not noticed generally because the coffin at the time was hidden behind the banks of snow.

The storm which broke over Plymouth today lashed with a biting snow, through which the President and Mrs. Coolidge traveled the 16 miles from Woodstock, where they spent last night. The clouds broke slightly at noon but still drove down the new covering of white, which continued during the obsequies at the house, but subsided while the short trip was being made down the Ludlow road to the cemetery.

The wind, trailing with it a few remaining flurries, did not relent and swept over Plymouth notch past the little group on the hillside, bringing a fresh mountain chill, as the pastor spoke the final words over the dead. Services were held at the Coolidge home at 2 p. m. and were open to whoever desired to attend.

The coffin was placed in the corner of one of the two parlors which adjoined. Near it were arraigned chairs for the President, Mrs. Coolidge, their son, John, Attorney-General Sargent, Henry Long, Mr. Coolidge's secretary in the Massachusetts State House, Gov. and Mrs. Billings of Vermont

WIVES TRADED FOR VODKA

Husbands, Too, Bartered Away, One for a Single Bottle.

By the Associated Press.

LENINGRAD, Russia, March 20. —The bartering of husbands and wives for Vodka, allegedly with the sanction of the local authorities, is reported from Odessa Province. Wives are worth more, measured in Vodka, than are husbands, if two instances cited may be taken as average ones.

A villager named Seperenko received two bottles from a neighboring farmer in exchange for his wife, while a peasant woman named Okopna turned her husband over to a woman friend for only one bottle, worth about 50 cents.

ORIGINATOR OF FLAG DAY DIES

BUFFALO, N. Y., March 20.—Miss Sarah Hinson, 85-year-old teacher and originator of Flag day, died at her home here today. More than 60 years ago Miss Hinson, seeking to instill greater patriotism in her class, began school with a salute to the flag and recitation of the oath of allegiance.

Ultimately June 14 was selected as a day of flag observance in her school and the practice spread to all the schools in Buffalo and later became nation-wide.

GANG THAT STOLE $300,000 ROUNDED UP IN NEW YORK

Lucky Arrest Leads to Confessions, Police Say, to Numerous Jewelry Robberies by R. R. Whittemore and Aids.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, March 20.—Three hundred detectives under the personal direction of Police Commissioner McLaughlin today produced alleged confessions to several major crimes of the last year by members of a gang of seven men and one woman; rounded up following a lucky arrest early yesterday.

A confessed murderer was held without bail. Four confessions to jewelry robberies on which the loot totaled $300,000 were made. Leads to the solutions of other crimes were given and an untapped mine of information awaited further investigation. All this came about because two detectives in a police car were suspicious of three men they saw leaving a supper club.

Richard Reese Whittemore, alleged leader of the gang; Leon Kraemer and his brother, Jack, both of Philadelphia, and Anthony Paladino of Brooklyn admitted their parts, police said, in a $200,000 robbery at Forty-eighth street and Fifth avenue, this city, last January.

Admits Other Robberies.

Paladino also confessed to helping rob the Stanley Jewelry Co. of $50,000 in gems, and Whittemore admitted that he and the gang robbed the store of J. Ross in Grand street of $60,000 worth of jewels last November.

Morris Goldberg was said to have been found in possession of two watches that were part of the $75,000 in loot taken from the Linhauer Jewelry Co. shop in Sixth avenue last fall.

The men, police believe, confessed in order to avoid extradition to Philadelphia and Baltimore, where Whittemore is wanted for killing a prison guard when he escaped from the Maryland penitentiary last February. He confessed to police that he was guilty of the murder. Other members of the gang also are wanted in Maryland.

Two murders were laid to the gang. Former Police Capt. Henry Helwig, who chased the robbers in the Fifth avenue holdup, has since disappeared under mysterious circumstances. Another man, Simon L. Gilden, of Baltimore, was found murdered in Trinity Church yard last Dec. 22 immediately after having been seen with members of the gang.

Paladino said that $30,000 worth of loot had been set aside for a defense fund in case any members of the gang were apprehended, according to police.

Mrs. Margaret Whittemore, said to be the wife of the gang leader; Pasquale Chicarelli and Bernard Mortillaro, both of New York, were the others arrested. Chicarelli and Mortillaro are accused of breaking into the safe of the George M. Cohan Theater on last March 8.

Mrs. Whittemore told police that she did not know her husband was a robber. She said she had toured the country with him, stopping at expensive hotels and riding in high-priced cars, but that she thought he was a traveling salesman.

CHICAGO POLICE CHIEF SAYS COMFORTS ENTICE MEN TO JAIL

Indorses New York Commissioner's Plan for Return to Ball and Chain.

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, March 20.—Most convicted criminals live better in jail than they do outside the bars, and enjoy life as much as if they were members of the country club set, Chief of Police Collins said today. He indorsed the program of Police Commissioner McLaughlin of New York for a return to the ball and chain, and a bread and water diet, and hard labor in jails and prisons.

Reinstatement of old-fashioned prison customs would do away with a standard comfort which actually entice some men to jail, Collins believes.

By the Associated Press.

HUNDREDS CONGRATULATE C. W. ELIOT ON 92ND BIRTHDAY

President Lowell of Harvard Among Those Who Call; Educator in Feeble Health.

By the Associated Press.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., March 20. —The world paid honor to Charles W. Eliot, president emeritus of Harvard University, on his ninety-second birthday today. To his simple colonial dwelling on Brattle street came hundreds of telegrams from every part of this country and abroad.

President Eliot has not been well this winter and rests daily after the midday meal until late in the afternoon.

Several of his children and grandchildren had called during the week to give him birthday greetings, scattering their visits so as not to fatigue him. President Lowell, his successor in office, was one of those who called.

President Eliot's mind is active, and a recent caller found him eager to discuss the problems and issues of the present day. He is an ardent prohibitionist and favors this country's joining the League of Nations.

FRENCH FRANC DROPS TO NEW LOW RECORD

Decline Caused by Fear Parliament Will Adjourn With Financial Problem Unsolved.

By the Associated Press.

PARIS, March 20.—The prospect that Parliament will adjourn for the Easter vacation without having solved the nation's financial problem, caused such uneasiness in business circles today that the franc declined to a new low record for the Paris exchange market. It was quoted at 28.33 to the dollar and 137.85 to the pound sterling, while importers rushed to buy American and British exchange to cover payments coming due in the next few weeks.

PEACE WITH RIFFS EXPECTED IN A FEW DAYS BY FRANCE

Abd-el-Krim Reported to Have Offered Terms; Painleve Strengthens Hope.

By the Associated Press.

PARIS, March 20.—Peace probably will be established in Morocco within a few days, according to information coming from quarters which generally are well informed.

Officially, the Foreign Office declares that nothing is known about the possibility of imminent peace pourparlers with the insurgent Riffian tribesmen, but Paul Painleve, Minister of War, replying to an interpellation by Pierre Renaudel in the Chamber of Deputies' Army Committee today, lent color to the reports of an early peace.

"You may rest assured," he said, "that the Government is neglecting no serious opportunity to restore peace with the Riffs."

It is reported that Abd-el-Krim, the Riffian leader, has made definite proposals through accredited emissaries and that they are now being studied by the French Ministry of War and probably will be accepted.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 20.—Capt. Robert Dollar, shipmaster, whose name is known in every port for his around-the-world steamer service, and his many other maritime accomplishments, celebrated his eight-second birthday today by thoroughly inspecting his big trans-Pacific liner, the President Pierce. The veteran walked and climbed from bilge to bridge without asking anyone's aid.

"Work and live long," he said. "Do not permit the rust of retirement to kill you off."

RULE-OR-RUIN WILL BE ISSUE IN LEAGUE AT NEXT SESSION

Small Powers, in Rebellion, Bent on Upsetting Present Control or Smashing the Organization.

OPEN COVENANTS VS. SECRET DEALS

Policy of England, France and Italy Unmasked by Recent Debacle at Geneva Over Council Seats.

By Special Cable to the Post-Dispatch and the New York World.

Copyright, 1926, by the Press and Pulitzer Publishing Cos. (New York World and Post-Dispatch.)

GENEVA, March 20.—The September meeting of the League of Nations will witness a fight for control compared to which the recent disastrous session here was a mere skirmish. The precipitation of the struggle for control of the Council, which resulted in sidetracking Germany, was entirely out of accord with the program. While this was at first considered tragic, it now seems the worst setback to old-line diplomacy since President Wilson's advent at Versailles.

Against the policy of England, France, Italy and Poland, the smaller Powers now are bent on ruling or destroying the League. The lines were already drawn for the fight, which was not expected to break out before September, but when the smaller states perceived that the French plan was to pack the Council with Latin members, Spain and Brazil simultaneously with the admission of Germany, immediate action became imperative.

Sweden's objection to Germany was merely the first line of defense. The declaration of Premier Motta of Switzerland, at the final session, that had the question reached the Assembly an overwhelming majority would have backed the Scandinavians, is significant.

Scheme of Big Powers.

The big Powers hoped to make Germany's admission the price the smaller Powers would have to pay if they blocked the game, not expecting that the small nations would still hold out in case Foreign Minister Stresemann of Germany was won over.

Inasmuch as Brazil's one-handed game against admitting Germany to the Council made it unnecessary to record a vote, it is useless to speculate on what might have happened. Paradoxically, in quarters where Afranio Melo Franco of Brazil was execrated a week ago today he is regarded as a hero. Whatever his motives were, he is admitted to have saved half a dozen members from a most unpleasant predicament.

The crisis which would have been inevitable, had it not been for Brazil's action, might have smashed the League, or at least resulted in the resignation of some nations and governmental crises in others. By shouldering the entire responsibility, the Brazilian delegate saved the faces of Stresemann, Briand, Skrzynski and Sir Austen Chamberlain.

Possibly Unden of Sweden and Benes of Czecho-Slovakia also were helped out of a difficult situation. Their willingness to sacrifice their Council seats to effect a compromise on Germany did not find whole-hearted approval in their respective capitals.

Resentment Growing.

At the same time a disagreeable reaction among the Little Entente was averted. Had Poland and Holland replaced Czecho-Slovakia and Sweden in the Council it is certain that Brazil, Spain and China, and possibly Persia, would have quit the League and the adherence of Germany herself would have been doubtful. This would have been a perilous victory for French diplomacy.

The resentment against secret dealing and the non-re-election of Council members which has smouldered for two years among non-members, and which was evidenced by Unden's valiant stand of more than a year against the failure of a Mosul settlement is growing rapidly.

While the former Allies will secretly seek a smooth way for a suitable reorganization of the Council by September Unden's publicly declared opposition to secret deals, with Switzerland, Uruguay

DOWAGER QUEEN OF DENMARK DIES FROM PNEUMONIA

Louise, Widow of Frederick VIII and Daughter of Charles XV of Sweden, Succumbs at Age of 74.

GREAT GRANDSIRE WAS A COMMONER

Princess Descended From Desiree Clary, Who Captivated Napoleon and Married Bernadotte.

By the Associated Press.

COPENHAGEN, March 20.—Dowager Queen Louise of Denmark, widow of King Frederick VIII, died this evening. Her death was directly due to a heart attack superinduced by pneumonia. She was 74 years old.

Several days ago symptoms of pneumonia appeared, and last night the heart was greatly affected. The Queen rallied to treatment, but another attack came at 4 p. m. She died shortly afterward from heart paralysis.

Louise was the first sovereign of Denmark to die as Dowager Queen in 150 years. All of her children except King Haakon of Norway, were at the death bed, as well as Queen Alexandra, Crown Prince Christian Frederick and Prince Knud.

King Christian has decreed three months' court mourning.

The royal house of Sweden, founded by the great-grand parents of Dowager Queen Louise, 117years ago, is believed to be the sole dynastic relic in Europe of the reign of Napoleon.

Joseph Bonaparte's Marriage.

Napoleon's brother, Joseph Bonaparte, married the elder daughter of M. Clary, a wealthy soap-maker of Marseilles. She brought into the then needy Bonapart family a dowry of 150,000 francs. Eugenie Desiree, the younger and prettier daughter of the house of Clary, attracted Napoleon, and their love letters have been preserved. But the stronger fascination of the penniless Creole widow, Josephine Beauharnais, prevailed over both the charms of the Marseilles maid and the lure of the family purse. When she learned of the marriage of Napoleon to Josephine in 1796, Desiree wrote to him, "You have made my life a misery, yet I am weak enough to forgive you."

Two years afterward, in 1798, she married Jean Baptiste Jules Bernadotte. This marriage allied Bernadotte, one of the most ambitious military leaders of the time, with Joseph Bonaparte. In later years, Napoleon endured factional opposition and hostile plotting from Bernadotte as he would have endured them from no one else. In the establishment of the empire, he made Bernadotte a Marshal. He placed Bernadotte in command of the army of Hanover, kept him at a distance from Paris, and did not permit him to command French troops, giving him Bavarians, Poles and Saxons.

Quarrel With Napoleon.

After Wagram, Napoleon and Bernadotte quarreled openly over the credit for the victory, and Bernadotte was sent into virtual exile as an envoy to Rome. There in 1809 a Swedish delegation found him and offered him the throne of their country as Crown Prince and successor to the childless Charles XIII.

Against Napoleon's wish, Bernadotte went to Sweden and accepted the offer, becoming later King Charles XIV. He refused, before his departure, to promise that he would never bear arms against his former chief. Once established as Crown Prince and virtual sovereign, Bernadotte broke with Napoleon and sought the friendship of England and Russia. His objective was to obtain the union of Norway with Sweden, under his sovereignty, and in this he succeeded. In a larger ambition, to place himself on the throne of France after the expected downfall of Napoleon, he failed.

Desiree's sister, the wife of Joseph Bonaparte, was Queen of Naples and Sicily, and later of Spain. The Crown Prince of Sweden, son of Bernadotte and Desiree, married the daughter of Eugene Beauharnais, Napoleon's stepson. Later marriages introduced a Teutonic strain into the house of Bernadotte.

Louise was the tallest and the richest Princess in Europe when she became Queen of Denmark in 1906 upon the ascendancy of her husband, Prince Frederick, who succeeded to the throne of his father, King Christian IX, when the latter died Jan. 30, 1906, in his eighty-eighth year.

On Throne Six Years.

For a brief six years the beautiful, serious-minded and notoriously democratic Queen Louise remained upon the throne with her popular consort. King Frederick VIII, who conducted the affairs of his Government in such a manner that he frequently was spoken of as one of the most competent business men who ever guided the destinies of a kingdom. Queen Louise's part in the happiness and prosperity of this short reign was fully recognized throughout Europe.

The sudden and unexpected death of King Frederick from a stroke of apoplexy while he was walking unattended through the streets of Hamburg, Germany, on the night of May 15, 1912, ended Queen Louise's tenure, whereupon she stepped down from the throne in favor of her oldest son, Prince Christian, and his wife, who was the Duchess Alexandrine of Mecklenburg.

HARVESTER FIRM'S TRADING FOR CORN PROVES EXPENSIVE

Company Stands to Lose About $300,000 on Sales Made for Grain.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

CHICAGO, March 20.—The International Harvester Co., of which Harold F. McCormick is a dominating influence, stands to lose about $300,000 as a result of its material sympathy for the corn belt farmer on the opening of the new year when the market price for corn fell so low. President Alexander Laegge of the company then offered to trade $1 worth of farm machinery to the farmer for corn at $1 a bushel. Corn was selling at 85 cents. Farmers poured in their corn and took machinery. Those that had no corn bought it at 80 cents and sold it to the company for $1 taking machinery.

The company now has $1,000,000 of corn bought at $1. The price for May delivery is 74 cents. The farmers have delivery options for May, June and July. With freight and other charges the corn is worth about 65 cents on the farm.

If there was a 30 per cent profit on the machinery, the Harvester company is about even. However, the company expects some of its probable loss to be offset by the effect the offer has had in stimulating sales.

U. S. TO HAVE DELEGATES ON ARMS COMMISSION

State Department Says There Is No Ground for Reports Coolidge Might Not Name Experts.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, March 20.—The United States Government will be officially represented at the opening meeting of the preparatory commission on disarmament meeting called by the Council of the League of Nations. The names of members of the American delegation will be made public in the immediate future. It may be necessary to change some of the technical advisers, who would have been attached to the American delegation had the meeting been held in February, as first planned.

In making this announcement today, officials of the State Department made it clear that there was not the slightest ground for reports that President Coolidge might not send a delegation to this meeting. From the outset the President has been deeply interested in the proposed conference to limit armaments, and he has not considered withdrawing on account of the delay in calling the preparatory commission together.

FRENCH IN RAGE AT PUBLICATION OF HOUGHTON REPORT

Editors More Agitated Over Fact That It Was Made Public Than About Its Contents.

COOLIDGE BLAMED FOR POLITICAL ACT

Ambassador Denounced as Pro-German—Document Called Defamatory and Disobliging.

Copyright, 1926, by the Press and Pulitzer Publishing Cos. (New York World and Post-Dispatch.)

PARIS, March 20. — United States Ambassador Houghton's report, which was printed in the American papers two days ago, was published here today and the French papers are filled with rage.

The Embassy here gave out a statement embodying in it a telegram from Washington denying that either Houghton or Hugh S. Gibson, Minister to Switzerland, had given information to anyone but President Coolidge or Secretary of State Kellogg. This was meant to be tranquilizing, but it missed its aim, if it did not accentuate the resentment, because the report, as printed here and particularly as reprinted from London papers, gives the impression that the Ambassador's unfavorable report was given out by the Presidents, gives the impression that they lanuched it deliberately for political reasons.

"Disobliging and Defamatory."

The substance of the report, though regarded as hard on France, has not made the impression that its issuance has.

The Journal des Debats calls it "even more surprising than regrettable" and adds "Houghton's report contains not only disobliging but defamatory imputations against French policy and official English circles. It is unprecedented that an official document, which is essentially confidential affecting foreign Governments, should be precipitately divulged."

The Journal says that both President Coolidge and Secretary Kellogg showed their mad humor.

The newspapers also accuse Houghton of pro-Germanism, basing their comments on his statement that he knew nothing about European politics until he was appointed to Berlin where, says the paper, he formed his political ideas.

The liberal papers are harily less bitter. Le Quotidien, which is the most radical of the big papers, says it is not surprised that the American Government broadcast the report, and that it is an effort to counterbalance the move by Italy, France and Japan to have the sea and land disarmament questions treated together. It charges that America deliberately launched the attack on peaceful European intentions, saying "It is plain as day that there is going to be an American campaign, the purpose of which will be to exercise pressure on European states by accusing them of militarism.

"A Precious Warning."

"The maneuver is a precious warning. It is not sufficient to show good intentions to disarm intrigue. The weak are not believed. The strong are respected."

Leon Bailby's Intransigeant links the Houghton report to Borah's demand for an indemnity to shipping lost in the war.

It declares:

"Evidently, with the influence of public opinion as his purpose, President Coolidge has given publicity to the report of Ambassador Houghton, which is an act of aggression against European powers —an aggression which is almost explicable." Bailby declares the Ambassador was so "downright peremptory and unjust" that there is no use trying to answer his report, but only to consider what may be done to save what remains of American sympathy for France.

All the newspapers take the same tone—that the President published the Ambassador's report as part of the policy of isolation and to counteract the move to have land and disarmament discussed together.

Mac DONALD DOUBTS LEAGUE CAN SURVIVE COUNCIL ROW

Former Premier Takes Chamberlain to Task for One of Most Tragic Failures of British Diplomacy.

By the Associated Press.

BLACKBURN, Lancashire, Eng., March 20.—Former Premier Ramsay MacDonald, referring in a speech here today to the League of Nations meetings at Geneva, said, "We have just witnessed one of the most tragic failures British diplomacy has ever met. It is doubtful now whether the League will survive."

He said that Sir Austen Chamberlain, British Foreign Secretary, and spokesman at Geneva, must tell Parliament and the country the whole story. Chamberlain had tried his "free hand" and had committed political suicide by it, MacDonald asserted. Chamberlain and the conservatives had made a great blunder which had hurt British prestige in Europe, according to MacDonald.

"It was not long since," he continued, "that Great Britain stood well in the forefront of European councils. Where are we today?"

He felt sorry for the awkward position of his country in Europe now. If Great Britain wanted to draw closer to European nations, it must do it as a self-respecting and independent-minded country, seeking justice and righteousness and never losing sight of that goal.

Referring to the League, MacDonald feared for its life. The present position was not due to Brazil's refusing to vote to give Germany a permanent seat in the council, but to the fact that five or six gentlemen forgot the League and tried to create "a triumvirate" with disastrous results. MacDonald asked what would happen if the same men should try to reform the League Council.

Chamberlain, it is understood, has not been in good health for the last few days. His work at Geneva greatly fatigued him, particularly that period prior to his return to London.

Southbound planes will leave Chicago at 6 a. m. daily except Sunday and Monday, arrive at Peoria at 7:15 and leave at 7:25, arrive at Springfield at 8:05 and leave at 8:15 and land at Lambert-St. Louis Field at 9:15 a. m.

The schedule will make possible overnight service between St. Louis and New York. Letters posted here for the afternoon mail will be delivered the same evening in Chicago and the next morning in New York while mail posted in New York during the afternoon will arrive here the following forenoon.

Postage will be ten cents an ounce or fraction thereof between here and Chicago and an additional charge of five cents for the zone between Chicago and New York. The charge for the zone for mail not originating in the shuttle lines is eight cents. The service from St. Louis will begin April 15, as has been previously announced, and from Chicago south on April 16.

Because there has been no demand for all-week service by business houses, the mail planes will not operate on two days of each week as shown in the published schedule.

After her first lengthy solo in the second act, applause stopped the performance and bouquets were thrown onto the stage.

and nine other South American countries supporting him, makes impossible a unanimous recommendation by the Council for reorganization. The presence of Germany and Argentina on the Commission studying reorganization also precludes any changes that will necessitate amending the League Covenant.

While the smaller Powers, especially the former neutrals, always have resented secret diplomacy at Geneva, they never openly rebelled heretofore because they wanted to nurse the League along until Germany and the United States joined.

Attitude Toward U. S.

There are deep-seated convictions that France, Italy, Poland, the Little Entente and certain factions in England never wanted Germany to become a member. A very prominent British official recently stated that the time had come when Europe should exert her efforts to keep the United States out rather than bring her into the League.

Furthermore, since Chamberlain killed the Geneva protocol in favor of regional pacts it was feared that he intended to make the League an adjunct to Locarno rather than Locarno an adjunct to the League. Rather than become co-guarantors of Locarno with the England and Italy, League members will burst the organization wide open and the majority will withdraw.

The optimistic few, however, see in the recent debacle, and in the battle that is certain to come in September, the inevitable clash between the two theories of "open covenants openly arrived at" and the old-style secret diplomacy. They consider the evolutionary process a matter of decades, and are not discouraged, even if occasional setbacks are encountered.

DISPUTE OVER TRIAL OF SCOTT

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, March 20. — Robert Scott, pardoned from a California prison so that he could be tried for murder in Chicago, formally pleaded not guilty today. A controversy immediately arose between prosecution and defense when Assistant State's Attorney Byrne declared that Scott would first be tried on seven robbery charges.

Scott's attorney, William S. Stewart, who saved Scott's brother, Russell, from the gallows by a last-minute insanity trial, declared it would be a violation of the agreement by which Scott was returned, to try him on the robbery charges before the murder trial. No trial date was set pending the settlement of the dispute. Scott is charged with the murder of Joseph Maurer, a young drug clerk, who the State contends was killed in a holdup committed by the Scotts.

MOTHER HELD FOR KILLING SON

By the Associated Press.

FAIRMONT, Minn., March 20.—Mrs. Esther Atz, 26 years old, was held to the grand jury today on a charge of first-degree murder in connection with the death of her son, Raymond, 5. Medical experts testified at a hearing that poison, found in the boy's body, caused his death.

Preparations were made to exhume the body of Florence Atz, 2, who died last May. Both children suffered convulsions, according to Dr. R. C. Hunt.

21 KILLED, SIX HURT IN BLAST IN STEEL MILL

400 Tons of Molten Metal Swirl Down Upon Workers in Factory Near Birmingham, Ala.

By the Associated Press.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., March 20.—Four hundred tons of molten metal, slushing and sputtering in all directions when No. 2 furnace of the Woodward Iron Co. exploded early today, caused the instant death of 16 workers; five others died in a hospital tonight from burns and six others are in a serious condition. One man still is missing.

The 80-foot steel iron-makers gave way without warning and the whir and swish that came with the downpour of metal told those outside the flaming area what had occurred. A number of workers were caught in the molten iron ore and killed instantly by the intense heat of the metal. Those not directly in the path of the fiery shower were caught in its scattered sheets which inflicted grave injuries.

The explosion wecked steam and water pipes and sent their contents into the mass.

The mixing of water with the metal and burning coke added to the havoc.

The accident was one of the most unusual in the history of ironmaking in this district. The cause of it had not been determined. The furnace was heated full blast and blew up just before time for the cooling process to begin.

"She broke off at the third ring just where the water pipes go in," declared an old iron maker who was standing nearby. The furnace was 19 feet in diameter and was heavily lined with firebrick.

Rescue crews quickly formed, began the task of removing the injured and then the dead. More than an hour was required for the metal to cool. It had run in great mass for some distance then trickled off in lesser streams, making weird figures about the plant.

WISH FOR SIMPLE FUNERAL CARRIED OUT FOR COL. COOLIDGE

and former Gov. Stickney of Vermont. The latter gave the President's father the title of colonel by appointing him to that rank on the governor's staff 25 years ago.

Most of the furniture had been removed from the parlor in which the President was seated but behind the coffin was revealed one of the old fashioned corner "what nots" with its small mirror and shelves for odds and ends. The piano was covered with flowers.

Clippings in Bible.

In the room adjacent where the neighbors assembled, and where Mr. Coolidge took the oath as president, were two or three chairs. There were, perhaps, 50 persons in the house. Most of them remained standing. The leather bound bible over which Mr. Coolidge pledged himself as the nation's chief was in place on the front table, and from its pages protruded numerous newspaper clippings about the President cut out and kept by the old colonel. An old cherry book case stood to one side and across the glass of its door Col. Coolidge had pasted a newspaper photograph of the family group when his son was Lieutenant Governor of Massachusetts. A portrait in oval wooden frame hung on one wall and on another was a picture of the President when he was Governor of Massachusetts; his card as Governor remaining pushed in between the glass frame.

"I am the Resurrection and the Life, saith the Lord; He that believeth in Me, though he were dead, yet shall he live, and whosoever liveth and believeth in Me shall never die." The minister read the funeral service while the Plymouth people, wearing their boots and many of them retaining their heavy overcoats, stood with bowed heads. When he reached the Apostles' Creed they repeated the words with him.

There was hush after the Rev. Mr. White had finished while the President and Mrs. Coolidge prepared themselves for the trip to the cemetery.

The sleigh-hearse was drawn to the front door and the detail of six enlisted men placed the casket carefully on it. The President soon appeared, wearing a heavy black overcoat and high silk hat. The sleighs were arranged in line and the President, with Mrs. Coolidge, John, and the Attorney-General entered the one behind the hearse.

Grave Beneath Maples

Down the village street and into the snow-covered highway wound the little funeral train of five sleighs and a bob sled, stopping at the cemetery gate, which is near the Coolidge plot. Moving picture men lined the outside roadway. The soldiers lowered the coffin from the hearse and, preceded by the pastor and followed by the President and a small group of close friends and relatives, mounted the steps until half way up the hillside. There they turned along the terrace to the open grave beneath four stark maples.

The coffin was lowered and Mr. Coolidge stood facing the minister. Taking places alongside him were Mrs. Coolidge, John, and Mr. and Mrs. John Wilder, both 83, Col. Coolidge's nearest neighbors. It was the President's last act before leaving the cemetery to shake their hands and wish them good fortune.

The service used by the Rev. John White was the revised version of the Episcopal order for burial. The psalms read at the home were the 39th, "Lord Let Me Know Mine End"; 27th, "The Lord Is My Light and My Salvation" and 121st "I Will Lift Up Mine Eyes Unto the Hills, From Whence Cometh My Help."

A path had been cut through the cemetery to the Coolidge plot by workmen. Imitation moss had been placed over the earth thrown from the grave to remove the harshness of the cold mound. High banks of snow concealed the grave from those who did not stand close by the President.

The short service at the cemetery was over quickly and the President returned to the old household, which had lost all that was close to him. It was suggested that the house should be presented to the nation or the state, for preservation, but the President's friends indicated that he will give no attention to its disposition until later. Twenty minutes after reaching the house, he, Mrs. Coolidge, John and Attorney-General Sargent left for Woodstock to board their train for Washington.

PRESIDENT DUE TO REACH CAPITAL THIS MORNING

After Gruelling Day in Storm at Plymouth, Executive and Wife Retire to Car Aboard Special Train to Rest.

By the Associated Press.

ON BOARD PRESIDENT COOLIDGE'S TRAIN EN ROUTE TO WASHINGTON, WHITE RIVER JUNCTION, Vt., March 20.—President Coolidge was on his way back to the White House tonight, a tie to his Vermont birthplace broken.

Fresh in his memory was the farm house in the hamlet of Plymouth, his father's home for many years, and scene today of the funeral of the man who had such a strong hold on his affections. Recurring to his mind, too, was the snow-blanketed graveyard which today received another Coolidge. It is the resting place also of his mother and sister, long since dead and of a son, whose body was taken there from the White House less than two years ago.

Concealing their grief, the President and Mrs. Coolidge went through a gruelling day. With a snowstorm sweeping over the mountains, they traveled 16 miles by automobile and open sleigh from Woodstock to Plymouth.

With a biting North wind whipping wet snow into their faces they stood in slush on the brink of Colidge's grave.

When they started back to Woodstock to board their train for Washington the storm had spent itself and the skies cleared. At the special left Woodstock at 2 o'clock, winding its way through the snow-covered mountains toward White River Junction and the south, the sun, hidden all day, broke through the scattering clouds.

The President and his wife retired to their car at the rear of the train to rest. Traveling with them as far as Northampton, Mass., was their son, John, who is a student at Amherst College. Others returning to the Capital with the President were Attorney-General Sargent, Major James E. Coupal, White House physician, and a dozen newspaper men and photographers.

The train is due in Washington early tomorrow.

SWEEPING ATTACK ON FEDERAL TRADE BODY IN SENATE

King of Utah Describes Majority as Protectors of Black Sheep and Wolves of Industrial World."

POINTS TO DROPPING OF SUGAR CASE

Says Three Members Have Disversed Themselves When They Learned Warren Was in Line for Cabinet.

By CHARLES G. ROSS, Chief Washington Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, March 20.—A devastating attack on the present make-up of the Federal Trade Commission, a majority of whose members he described as protectors of "the black sheep and wolves of the industrial world," was delivered on the floor of the Senate this afternoon by Senator King (Dem.), of Utah.

King's address was eulogized by Senator Norris (Rep.), of Nebraska, who lately exposed the inside workings of the Federal Trade Commission, as one of the ablest he ever had heard in the Senate. The facts set out by King, said the Nebraska Senator, made it evident that the Senate committed a grave mistake in its recent confirmation of Charles W. Hunt as a member of the Trade Commission.

Dealing in a general way with the tenderness of the Coolidge administration toward large aggregations of capital, King charged that the President obviously had fallen under the influence of great corporations and that Secretary of Commerce Hoover was largely responsible for the growth of price fixing organizations "inimical to honest business."

Says Majority Is Reactionary.

King then described the line-up in the Trade Commission, with former Congressman William E. Humphrey, Vernon W. Van Fleet and Hunt on one side and former United States Senator John F. Nugent and Houston Thompson on the other. He pointed out that the commission, intended by law to prevent unfair trade practices and procure evidence against illegal combinations, had been given a reactionary majority by President Coolidge's appointment of Humphrey and Hunt.

Humphrey succeeded Victor Murdock, of Kansas, a liberal Republican. Immediately upon his appointment, Humphrey became the dominating figure in the commission and effected a material change in its rules. Publicity was curtailed, and, according to King, complaints began to be dismissed on stipulations and the reviewing board of the commission was enlarged and "packed" with men of the same viewpoint as that of the majority of the commission. As these changes, King charged, were in line with the general administration attitude of complacency toward the formation of great industrial units.

Sought President's Opinion.

King recalled that the commission, Under the control of Humphrey, Hunt and Van Fleet, refused to act on several Senate resolutions, adopted late in 1924 and early in 1925, calling for investigation of the Bread Trust, the electric power interests, open price associations and the alleged attempt of corporations to suppress co-operative organizations.

Thompson and Nugent, a militant minority of the commission, demanded that the investigation proceed. The Humphrey faction replied that the commission lacked the necessary authority. Finally, in May of last year, Thompson and Nugent wrote to the President and asked him to get an opinion from the Attorney-General concerning the authority of the commission to conduct the investigations.

Five months passed without reply from either the President or the Attorney-General.

"What was the result?" asked King. "The Bread Trust grew and thrived and perfected plans for its $2,000,000,000 organization. This never could have been started if the Trade Commission had acted on the Senate resolution."

At the end of five months, the Budget Bureau in the meantime having notified the Trade Commission that it would have to stand a cut of $125,000 in its estimates, Thompson and Nugent gave out a public statement regarding the blocking of investigations by the majority and the efforts of the minority to get an opinion from the Department of Justice. A short time later the Attorney-General answered that the commission had a right to make the investigations, and they are now belatedly under way.

Tells of Sugar Complaints.

King told in detail of the complaint lodged by the commission against the Michigan Sugar Co. and other beet sugar concerns in January, 1925.

"That," he remarked pointedly, "was before the commission knew that Charles Beecher Warren, who was soon afterward nominated by the President to be the Attorney General of the United States, was from Woodstock to Plymouth.

With a biting North wind whipping wet snow into their faces they stood in slush on the brink of Coolidge's grave.

When they started back to Woodstock to board their train for Washington the storm had spent itself and the skies cleared. As the special left Woodstock at 5 o'clock, winding its way through the snow-covered mountains toward White River Junction and the south, the sun, hidden all day, broke through the scattering clouds.

The President and his wife retired to their car at the rear of the train to rest. Traveling with them as far as Northampton, Mass., was their son, John, who is a student at Amherst College. Others returning to the Capital with the President were Attorney-General Sargent, Major James F. Coupal, White House physician, and a dozen newspaper men and photographers.

The train is due in Washington early tomorrow.

Unto the Hills, From Whence Cometh My Help."

A path had been cut through the cemetery to the Coolidge plot by workmen. Imitation moss had been placed over the earth thrown from the grave to remove the harshness of the cold mound. High banks of snow concealed the grave from those who did not stand close by the President.

The short service at the cemetery was over quickly and the President returned to the old household, which had lost all that was close to him. It was suggested that the house should be presented to the nation or the state, for preservation, but the President's friends indicated that he will give no attention to its disposition until later. Twenty minutes after reaching the house, he, Mrs. Coolidge, John and Attorney-General Sargent left for Woodstock to board their train for Washington.

SWEEPING ATTACK ON FEDERAL TRADE BODY IN SENATE

King of Utah Describes Majority as Protectors "of Black Sheep and Wolves of Industrial World."

POINTS TO DROPPING OF SUGAR CASES

Says Three Members Reversed Themselves When They Learned Warren Was in Line for Cabinet.

By CHARLES G. ROSS,
Chief Washington Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, March 20.—A devastating attack on the present make-up of the Federal Trade Commission, a majority of whose membership he described as protectors of "the black sheep and wolves of the industrial world," was delivered on the floor of the Senate this afternoon by Senator King (Dem.), of Utah.

King's address was eulogized by Senator Norris (Rep.), of Nebraska, who lately exposed the inside workings of the Federal Tariff Commission, as one of the ablest he ever had heard in the Senate. The facts set out by King, said the Nebraska Senator, made it evident that the Senate committed a grave mistake in its recent confirmation of Charles W. Hunt as a member of the Trade Commission.

Dealing in a general way with the tenderness of the Coolidge administration toward large aggregations of capital, King charged that the President obviously had fallen under the influence of great corporations and that Secretary of Commerce Hoover was largely responsible for the growth of price-fixing organizations "inimical to honest business."

Says Majority Is Reactionary.

King then described the line-up in the Trade Commission, with former Congressman William E. Humphrey, Vernon W. Van Fleet and Hunt on one side and former United States Senator John F. Nugent and Houston Thompson on the other. He pointed out that the commission, intended by law to prevent unfair trade practices and procure evidence against illegal combinations, had been given a reactionary majority by President Coolidge's appointment of Humphrey and Hunt.

Humphrey succeeded Victor Murdock, of Kansas, a liberal Republican. Immediately upon his appointment, Humphrey became the dominating figure in the commission and effected a material change in its rules. Publicity was curtailed, and, according to King, complaints began to be dismissed on stipulations and the reviewing board of the commission was enlarged and "packed" with men of the same viewpoint as that of the majority of the commission. All these changes, King charged, were in line with the general administration attitude of complacency toward the formation of great industrial units.

King recalled that the commission, Under the control of Humphrey, Hunt and Van Fleet, refused to act on several Senate resolutions, adopted late in 1924 and early in 1925, calling for investigation of the Bread Trust, the electric power interests, open price associations and the alleged attempt of corporations to suppress co-operative organizations.

Sought President's Opinion.

Thompson and Nugent, a militant minority of the commission, demanded that the investigations proceed. The Humphrey faction replied that the commission lacked the necessary authority. Finally, in May of last year, Thompson and Nugent wrote to the President and asked him to get an opinion from the Attorney-General concerning the authority of the commission to conduct the investigations.

Five months passed without a reply from either the President or the Attorney-General.

"What was the result?" asked King. "The Bread Trust grew and thrived and perfected plans for its $2,000,000,000 organization. This never could have been started if the Trade Commission had acted on the Senate resolution."

At the end of five months, the Budget Bureau in the meantime having notified the Trade Commission that it would have to stand a cut of $125,000 in its estimates, Thompson and Nugent gave out a public statement regarding the blocking of investigations by the majority and the efforts of the minority to get an opinion from the Department of Justice. A short time later the Attorney-General answered that the commission had a right to make the investigations, and they are now belatedly under way.

Tells of Sugar Complaints.

King told in detail of the complaint lodged by the commission against the Michigan Sugar Co. and other beet sugar concerns in January, 1925.

"That," he remarked pointedly, was before the commission knew that Charles Beecher Warren, who was soon afterward nominated by the President to be the Attorney-General of the United States, was the controlling power in the Michigan Sugar Co. Humphrey, Hunt and Van Fleet all agreed with the minority that the companies were violating the anti-trust laws, and ordered an investigation.

"Evidence was gathered which showed beyond a reasonable doubt that the respondents were guilty of iniquitous methods of destroying competition and raising prices. Then what happened? Humphrey, Hunt and Van Fleet, all of whom had voted for the complaint, voted that the cases be dismissed and they were dismissed."

After noting that Warren, soon after the filing of the complaint, had resigned from the Michigan Sugar Co. King continued:

"The Attorney-General ought to have taken up the record and had those companies indicted for violation of the anti-trust laws. But Mr. Warren seemed to have been destined for high honors, and no action was taken."

To Continue Challenges.

Replying to a question, King said that the Commissioners did not know of Warren's connection with the Michigan Sugar Co. till he resigned from it.

In conclusion, King announced that he intended to keep on challenging the Attorney-General and the Trade Commission until he succeeded in arousing public interest in "the great combinations of capital that are threatening the integrity of our industrial life."

Following King, Senator Norris declared that the commission could not function in the manner intended by Congress unless it were given a personnel in sympathy with the antitrust laws.

"Humphrey," he said, "is now the dominating mind of the commission. I do not question his integrity, but he is so constituted that he has no sympathy for the little fellow in business. He is quite honest about it. He is one of those who believe that the way to help the poor man is to help the rich man first, so he can give the poor man a job.

Norris and Mussolini.

"Why, there are people in this country who believe that the Mussolini form of government is better than ours. I've heard commendation of the Mussolini form of government from men in that cloakroom. (He pointed to the door of the Republican cloakroom). Those who believe that way are, of course, in favor of the Trade Commission as it now stands.

"The majority of the Trade Commission, I have no doubt, are fine men, but none of the three has any business on the commission.

"There has been an attempt by the head of the Government to fill this commission and others with men who do not believe in the laws creating them. Only two men are left on the Trade Commission to carry out its original purpose—Thompson and Nugent—and the country owes them a debt of gratitude for the way they have stood up against opposition."

Committee of 100 for Exposition

A committee of 100 is to be appointed by president Carl F. G. Meyer of the Chamber of Commerce to assist 12 members of the chamber in planning the Greater St. Louis Independence Celebration and Exposition of Industrial Progress, to be held on the old Flying Field, opposite Forest Park Highlands, Sept. 4 to 19. A speakers' bureau also is to be established to inform the public of details of the exposition.

Traveled Far to Return Home

WUKA DINOVICH, 13, as she appeared at Union Station last night at the end of her 5000-mile trip alone from Czecho-Slovakia.

GIRL, 13, TRAVELS 5000 MILES ALONE

Wuka Dinovich Comes to St. Louis From Czecho-Slovakia After 5 Years Abroad.

A weary little traveler arrived at Union Station on a Pennsylvania train last night, set her tiny straw suitcase on the train platform and cried a little as her big sister threw her arms about the child and welcomed her. She had come from Czecho-Slovakia, 5000 miles from home.

It was a long trip even for a grown-up, and 13-year-old Wuka Dinovich might be pardoned if she indulged, just a little, in a few tears. But she was glad to be with her own sister again and the direction card bearing her name and destination fell unnoticed to the platform as she picked up her suitcase again and trudged toward the gate.

There were photographers awaiting her there and she eyed them gravely as they prepared to take her picture. Still solemn she pushed back her tangled hair from her face. One of the cameramen essayed a jest and the flicker of a smile passed over her face as his flashlight boomed.

Forgot How to Speak English.

That was her welcome home after five years in Czecho-Slovakia, a stay during which the American born child forgot how to speak English. After her picture had been taken she went with her sister, Mrs. Milka Petkovich, to her home at 2658 Rutger street and next week she will go to school to learn her own language once again.

Wuka came into public notice Friday when it was learned she was stranded in New York without money. Her plight became the more remarkable when it was learned she was heir to a fourth of the estate of her father, Eli Dinovich, of Duluth, Minn., a prosperous real estate man.

Mrs. Petkovich explained last night that Wuka had been born in Duluth. After her mother's death, eight years ago, a friend of the family took a fancy to Wuka. The child lived for a time with her and finally was adopted.

Foster Mother Died Recently.

Later the foster mother took Wuka to Czecho-Slovakia. Some months ago Mrs. Ptkovich had her parish priest look up the child in Czecho-Slovakia and when she was located the administrator of her father's estate sent her $300 for her trip to St. Louis.

Her foster mother had died four months ago and the child had to make the journey alone. At New York the Travelers' Aid Society took her in charge and a representative of the society met her at the train here last night.

Mrs. Petkovich declined to tell the amount of her father's estate, but said Wuka's share was a "substantial sum." The child will get it when she is 21 years old.

MEETING ON RECALL OF MAYOR TODAY

Tenth Ward Improvement Body Sends Out Announcements—May Oragnize.

A movement to circulate petitions for the recall of Mayor Miller, based on the Mayor's course of action against Director of Public Utilities Wall, will be discussed at a meeting to be held at 2:30 p. m. today in Musicians' Club Hall, 3535 Pine boulevard. The formation of a recall organization is expected.

Announcements of the meeting, published yesterday, were signed by the Tenth Ward Improvement Association, of which John J. Heil is president. Heil is a Deputy Sheriff under Sheriff Schuler, who is affiliated politically with Collector Koeln, an active opponent of the Mayor.

An address issued yesterday by Heil refers not only to the Wall trial, in which the Mayor was judge, jury and star witness, but to the Mayor's unsuccessful attempt to compromise the Delmar crossing case with the Wabash Railroad. The address deals also with incidents of the campaign of a year ago, in which Miller was nominated and elected, and with the Mayor's attack on Senator Williams, for Williams' vote against the World Court.

60,000 Signatures Needed.

The charter provides that a special election shall be held, to vote on the removal of any elective officer, only after the filing of petitions with the signature of 20 per cent of the registered voters. This, with the present registration in St. Louis, would mean 60,000 signatures, but the charter greatly increases the difficulties by providing that the 20 per cent at large must include 20 per cent in each of 18 wards.

This requirement of distribution means, in practice, that canvassing must be carried on in residence neighborhoods, as well as downtown. It makes necessary a considerable body of either volunteer or paid workers. The petitions are subject to checking up by the Election Board, which must determine that the signatures are those of registered voters. If the petitions first filed are found to be insufficiently signed, supplementary petitions may be filed within 20 days after the first filing, and if the necessary number is not supplied then, the matter drops.

In a recall election, a majority vote suffices to remove the official in question. In case of removal of the Mayor from office, the president of the Board of Aldermen would become Mayor until the next regular State or city election, when a new Mayor would be chosen.

Statement by Glass Firm.

T. W. Rolph, managing engineer of the Holophane Glass Co., Inc., street lighting department, has issued a statement replying to references made, in the trial of Director Wall, to the street lighting equipment manufactured by the company.

Statements as to holophane lamp and glassware types, and as to the company's use of a lamp frame patented by Ralf Toensfeldt, chief electrical engineer of the utilities department, were made by Mayor Miller on the authority of George Heath, former superintendent of electrical construction in the department, and some of them were made by Heath in his testimony.

Rolph, in his statement, deals with the charges or intimations bearing on the efficiency and economical quality of the company's product.

He states that the first cost of holophane refractors, and of the holophane refractor type of lantern proposed for use in St. Louis, is greater than that of other types of globes, but that the cost of current is less, because of the effective direction of the light rays, and that the cost of maintenance is somewhat lower than other types. The saving in these respects, in a term of years, more than makes up for the greater first cost, Rolph says. He denies that holophane lanterns are difficult to clean, saying they are easier to clean than other panel types, and says they are not more open than other lamps to dust and insects. The breakage in cleaning, he declares, is small as compared to other lamps.

Toensfeldt's Connection.

As to Toensfeldt's connection with the designing of a lantern, the company's spokesman says:

"The holophane glassware and lanterns proposed for St. Louis have not been patented by Ralf Toensfeldt, Mr. Toensfeldt made an artistic, but not an engineering, design of a lantern, using prismatic panels, and obtained a design patent on this lantern. Such a patent is of slight importance, since any small change in contour would change the design so that it would no longer come under the patent. The fundamental idea of a lantern is old, and the idea of placing holophane refracting panels in a lantern is not patentable. Therefore, an infinite variety of lanterns can be made using the holophane panels developed for St. Louis and the patent obtained by Mr. Toensfeldt is practically of no importance. All the engineering development in connection with this lantern was carried out by the engineers of the Holophane Glass Co., to meet the requirements laid down by Mr. Toensfeldt, but Mr. Toensfeldt, to the best of our knowledge, never obtained or applied for any patent other than that connected with the artistic design of the lantern frame proper.

Mayor Goes to Texas to Attend Funeral of Intimate Friend.

Mayor Miller left last night for Houston, Tex., where his closest friend, Col. Charles Riche, a retired army engineer, died Friday.

He will accompany the body to Philadelphia, where burial services will be held. The Mayor's verdict in the trial of Director Wall will be reserved until after his return to St. Louis.

Col. Riche was the principal stockholder in the Southern Surety Co., of which Mayor Miller was formerly counsel and chairman of the board of directors. Col. Riche and the Mayor have long been friends and he visited the Mayor frequently.

Mayor Miller was accompanied to Houston by Swift Riche, son of Col. Riche. Col. Riche was honor graduate in Gen. Pershing's class at West Point 40 years ago. As an army engineer he was engaged in work on the Sault Ste. Marie canal, the Galveston sea wall and the Panama Canal fortifications.

DR. ANGELL DELIVERS TWO ADDRESSES HERE

Yale Head Says New Policy Is to Be Fewer Students and Better Facilities.

James Rowland Angell, president of Yale Universtiy, delivered two addresses in St. Louis yesterday, speaking before the student body of Washington University in the forenoon, and at the annual dinner of the Yale Alumni Association at the University Club last night.

"We are trying to build a finer and bigger Yale," President Angell told alumni members in his second speech. "Every department head in the University has agreed that Yale's policy for the future should be fewer numbers of students and better facilities and equipment. We have decided to reduce the number of students admitted each year in each school, and to concentrate our efforts on improving the plant without investing our capital in expansion. The proposed development of building facilities at Yale will be carried on with this in view. No buildings will be added that are not necessary for the University at its present size."

Decision on Sunday Chapel.

Speaking of the recent decision of a committee of the faculty to abolish compulsory Sunday chapel attendance, he said, "This action was taken after a petition, some eight or nine feet long, from the student body, had been submitted to the dean-elect, Clarence Mendell, which asked that students be excused from all chapel attendance." Almost every group of men on the campus felt that the daily chapel exercises were indispensable in maintaining the unity of feeling and interest necessary in an institution of this size." These exercises have certain values over and above and apart from any religious aspect which might be attached to them in the minds of some. But the Sunday exercises were made optional because these values were not so apparent in their case." Only seniors, President Angell explained, have been excused from the daily chapel exercises by a decision of this committee.

Change in Student Viewpoint

In the morning address, in Graham Memorial Chapel, on the university campus, President Angell said, "When I was a student the faculty member was popularly regarded as an enemy whose mission in life was to devise unpleasant tasks and who was to be encountered as seldom as possible. There was little co-operation between student and faculty in the solution of problems which confronted both. Recently, however, there has come about a decided change in this particular, and the change appears to have come from the students themselves rather than from pressure exerted from faculties.

Dean-elect Clarence Mendell preceded President Angell with a short talk on the curiosity and frankness manifest in the college student of today.

President Angell's and Dean Mendell's visit to St. Louis was in the interest of Yale's campaign for a $20,000,000 endowment fund. They are making a tour of the country.

TAYLOR MURDER INQUIRY TURNS TO SYRACUSE, N. Y.

By the Associated Press.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., March 20.—District Attorney Asa W. Keyes of Los Angeles, and his deputy, Harold L. Davis, who are investigating the killing of William Desmond Taylor, motion picture director, were in Syracuse several hours today in connection with the Taylor case.

They accomplished their purpose, it was indicated by the fact they were reported to have left Syracuse on the Empire State Express this afternoon, after having questioned one man in the office of Chief of Police Cadin.

What part Syracuse has taken in the nation-wide hunt for the slayer of Taylor could not be learned tonight. No one except Chief Cadin and Acting Detective Sergeant Bameslck knows to whom Keyes and Davis talked. The Syracuse officers were in conference with the Los Angeles officials during the visit.

The investigators arrived in Syracuse this morning. They are on their way to the Pacific Coast from Boston, where they were engaged in obtaining clews which may assist them in solving the Taylor slaying mystery.

U. S. WON'T BUDGE ON RESERVATIONS TO WORLD COURT

State Department Cannot Permit Geneva Conference to Modify or Interpret Senate Terms.

OUTSIDE OF THAT PLAN IS ALL RIGHT

American Participation at September Parley Depends Altogether on What It Plans to Do.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, March 20.—American participation in the Geneva conference next September, called to discuss the Senate reservations to adherence to the World Court, depends upon the nature of the discussion planned, it was disclosed today in an authorized outline of the administration's viewpoint.

No American participation was to be expected, it was said, if the conference planned to modify the reservations or attempt to interpret them. If kept within the proper limits, however, no objection will be made to the conference, as suggested by resolution of the Council of the League of Nations.

Whether an American representative will participate in the conference will be decided after Secretary of State Kellogg has conferred with President Coolidge, Chairman Borah of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, and others.

The outline of administration views was in substance as follows:

The Government does not understand that the League claims any power or jurisdiction to pass on the reservations, or that it has attempted to do so. The information of the State Department is that the Council merely has suggested that the nations adhering to the Court should each select representatives to meet at Geneva on Sept. 1 to discuss these reservations; that this will not be action by the League, but a conference among the representatives of nations who, under the reservations, must accept them in writing before American adherence to the Court can become effective. It is immaterial to the United States whether each nation acts separately with reference to these reservations or acts after consultation with the others.

The State Department understands it has no authority to enter into any agreement for modification of the reservations, or for any interpretations of them or any amendment of the statute establishing the World Court, beyond what is required by the reservations themselves.

WIFE OF TOWNE HEIR SAYS HE THREATENED TO KILL HER

Chicago Court Enjoins Lock Manufacturer's Son From Disposing of $600,000 Estate.

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, March 20.—The marital adventures of J. Meredith Towne, Stamford, Conn., lock manufacturer's son, and his immigrant factory girl-wife, Dorothy Ravin Towne, resulted today in announcement by Superior Judge Sabath that he would issue a writ for the technical detention of Towne and set his bond at $5000.

Judge Sabath, before whom Mrs. Towne's suit for separate maintenance is pending, also granted an injunction restraining Towne from disposing of his $600,000 estate pending the Court's decision.

Testimony involving threats against her life by her husband were made by Mrs. Towne on the witness stand. She said that shortly after coming to Chicago with her husband on Dec. 27, he requested her to go to Mexico and obtain a divorce.

"I refused to go," she said, "and he threatened to kill me. He said he would hire thugs to do it for $5 or $10."

On March 11, 1925, Mrs. Towne said her husband left her. After this, efforts were made to incarcerate her in an asylum, Mrs. Towne said. She charged she was lured to a Stamford sanitarium and detained there until she got word to her family through a musician, a former schoolmate, whom she saw at a dance at the institution. She was released from the sanitarium last November, she said.

Her husband, who was abroad, came to Chicago, she said, and wrote to her asking her to come here, "to start life anew." She came and they lived together until 10 days ago.

The estate of Moses Shoenberg, who died July 19 last, paid $42,319.43 as an inheritance tax to the State of Missouri, it was shown yesterday in a first annual settlement filed in Probate Court by his widow, Mrs. Dolly Shoenberg, and Sydney M. Shoenberg a son, as executors. The State tax was levied by Edwin W. Lee, who received $521 for his services, the record shows.

According to the settlement the assets on hand at the time of Mr. Shoenberg's death were valued at $1,775,195.54. Disbursements amounting to $450,724.30 have been made, leaving assets still in charge of the executors of $1,324,471.24. The largest disbursement was $242,952 paid on a claim held by the Globe Investment Co. So far the executors have received $20,400 in commissions. Mrs. Shoenberg received an additional $20,000 as a widow's allowance pending administration of the estate. Her husband was vice-president of the May Department Stores Co., which operates the Famous-Barr store. An inventory filed shortly after Mr. Shoenberg's death listed his property at $1,711,648.

Gus Zabinski of 9 Lewis place suffered a sprained neck yesterday when his coupe ran into a tree and turned over on St. Charles Rock road, near St. Vincent's Lane. He had swerved in an attempt to avoid striking Clarence Weiner of 1427 Leroy avenue, St. Louis County, who was knocked down, suffering slight cuts and bruises. Zabinski was arrested.

W. U. SCHOLARSHIP WINNERS ANNOUNCED

First Selections Under New Method, Based on Various Qualities.

Award of the five Washington University scholarships given graduates of the public high schools here semiannually, as determined by a new system of selection, was announced yesterday by the university.

Previously, the graduate at each of the five white high schools who had made the highest average grade during his high school career was given the scholarship, without regard to other factors. Sometimes choice among several pupils depended on fractions of 1 per cent in average grade. This time, as will be the rule hereafter, not only scholarship but moral character, initiative and vigor of mind, confidence, participation in social activities, and achievement of honors were considered.

The winners, from the graduating classes of last January, are:

Champlain Lindsley of 5788 Waterman avenue, Soldan High.

Margaret L. Gordon of 4138 Delmar boulevard, Central High.

Gerardine Richmond of 3869 Sullivan avenue, Yeatman High.

Herbert H. Grim of 2008 Virginia avenue, a son of former Circuit Judge J. Hugo Grimm, Roosevelt High.

Lester C. Haeckel of 4129 Hartford street, Cleveland High.

All of them will enter the college of liberal arts except Haeckel, who will take up the architectural course. In making the announcement, Chancellor Hadley of the university said:

"Only those students whose grades were over 90 per cent for the four years were recommended by the high schools and considered by the Committee of the Faculty that made the awards. Altogether, 27 applicants were interviewed by the committee, and while the decision was unanimous, the excellence of all the applicants made the task of selection a difficult one.

"In fact, we would like to have all these students come to Washington University, and I have no doubt that other scholarships or loans can be provided for several who may not, without such assistance, be able to continue their education. The excellence of these students constitutes a fine recommendation of our St. Louis schools and of the high type of boys and girls who attend them."

EX-U. S. ATTORNEY ACQUITTED

Two of Four Others in Louisiana Land Case Also Cleared.

By the Associated Press.

SHREVEPORT, La., March 20.—Hugh C. Fisher, former United States District Attorney, who with four Negroes, J. D. Wiley, J. J. Collins, Maggie Wiley and Willie Collins, has been on trial throughout the week in Federal Court on a charge of violating the Federal land laws and conspiracy, was acquitted this afternoon. In the case of Fisher, Maggie Wiley and Willie Collins, it was a complete acquittal. The jury returned verdicts of guilty against Wiley and J. J. Collins for violating the land laws, but acquitted them of the conspiracy charge.

Wiley, J. J. Collins and Maggie Wiley were remanded to jail to await trial on charges of using the mails to defraud pending against them. Willie Collins was released.

Bold Operations of Alcohol Ring Now Revealed

sometimes called themselves Vogel.

Formerly Were Distillers.

Prior to prohibition they had been in the distilling business in Philadelphia, and associated with them were Edward Silbersten, David Roth and Walter Enggasser, the latter a chemist. After the passage of the Volstead Act the Gersonsteins and Fogels were suspected of illegally making and selling spirits, and watched, but no substantial evidence was obtained.

Early in 1923, it is now charged, the "big four" set up Silberstein and Roth in the real estate business in Philadelphia. Silberstein's name became "Gillen." There is no evidence that "Gillen" and Roth did much real estate business, but they carried bank accounts, established credit and obtained the status of recognized business men.

This, the Government says, was part of a preconceived plot to establish "respectability" upon which they were to draw later.

Having thus established themselves as reputable business men, with sound references, "Gillen" and Roth came to Cleveland in April, 1923, and organized the Superior Industrial Alcohol Co. They obtained from the Prohibition Commissioner at Washington a permit to buy and manufacture pure grain alcohol, which they would denature and sell at a profit. They also organized two subsidiary companies, the Prospect Refining and Chemical Co., and the Central Refining Co., which were merely to buy and sell denatured alcohol. First Engasser and then "Gillen" was president of the Superior. They brought trusted men from Philadelphia to man the plant.

Each Firm Had Offices.

The Superior established itself in an old factory building in the eastern part of the city. The Prospect had a warehouse, but the Central merely had offices.

Now here is the keynote of the scheme. Dealers in grain alcohol are required to have permits and submit to inspection, but dealers in denatured alcohol are not. The Superior was required to keep books for the Government, showing the amount of grain alcohol purchased, and the disposition made of it. A storekeeper gauger was stationed on the premises, to certify that all the grain alcohol distilled and purchased was properly denatured, and that only denatured alcohol was shipped out. Periodical inspections might be made by internal revenue collectors. But the Prospect and Central concerns, as mere dealers in denatured alcohol, underwent no such official supervision, and were not required to keep any records.

Accordingly, it is now charged, the Superior would manufacture and buy pure grain alcohol, which it shipped to the "rings" in various cities. At the same time it would secretly get from its two subsidiaries an identical quantity of denatured alcohol, and sell it to legitimate customers. The latter sales would be recorded on the books as being the same grain alcohol which the company had manufactured or purchased, and which it pretended to have denatured.

Details of the Scheme.

To make it plainer, let us say that the Superior purchased five carloads of pure grain alcohol in Pennsylvania. The Government had a record of this purchase. The Superior had to show that it denatured and sold this alcohol to legitimate customers. Therefore, it obtained from its subsidiaries five carloads of denatured alcohol, which it sold in the open market to legitimate purchasers. Thus its purchases of grain alcohol were made to tally with its sales of denatured alcohol, and thus the Government was convinced from the records that the Superior was denaturing the grain alcohol which it bought or made, whereas, in fact, the denatured alcohol obtained from the subsidiaries had been substituted for the grain alcohol, and the latter had been shipped to the various "rings" for the bootleg trade.

This substitution was made possible by two circumstances:

First, the subsidiaries were not required to keep any record of their sales of denatured alcohol; second, the storekeeper gauger at the Superior plant was bribed to keep his eyes shut, as were the Deputy Internal Revenue Collectors who inspected transfers of alcohol.

"Big Four" Owners of All.

The "big four" were the real owners of all three concerns, the Government charges. The Superior distilled alcohol, but bought most of its supply in Pennsylvania. The Pennsylvania distillers were not responsible for what happened after they shipped the alcohol to the Superior at Cleveland, so long as they kept their own records straight for the Government. The Superior had a legal permit to buy.

The "big four" maintained offices in Philadelphia, from where they reached out over the country to put their fingers on men who wanted to obtain alcohol in carload lots. Several of the larger "rings" had purchasing agents stationed in Philadelphia, in close touch with the "big four," to whom orders were given and money paid.

So cautious were the "big four" that for many months the head of some of the city "rings" were not aware that their alcohol was coming through Cleveland. They didn't know where it came from, all they knew was that they gave their orders and paid their money in Cleveland and the alcohol arrived. Others, however, were aware of the machinery.

Undoubtedly the largest of the "rings" was that at Minneapolis and St. Paul. Of the 78 carloads of grain alcohol which the Government has definitely traced from the Superior to its various destinations, about half went to the "Twin Cities," of Minnesota. Other large purchasers were at Baltimore, Chicago, Duluth, Detroit and Pittsburg. Smaller consignments were traced to St. Louis, Boston, Philadelphia, Los Angeles, San Jose, Cal.; East Cambridge, Mass.; Shenandoah, Pa.; McKeesport, Pa., and Brookside, Minn.

The names of the recipients in St. Louis, it may as well be stated, are not known to the Federal investigators. Neither are the names of the recipients in many other cities to which shipments were traced. But, in Minneapolis, St. Paul, Duluth, Philadelphia, Detroit, Pittsburg, Boston, Chicago and San Jose, the investigators ran their men to earth, and many residents of these cities are among the indicted. Particularly in Minneapolis, St. Paul and Duluth, the "rings" appear to have been unearthed completely, due in part to the confession of two men serving terms for murder.

To get back to the workings of the syndicate, it was found that the grain alcohol which the Superior purchased outside never entered its plant. Upon arrival in Cleveland it usually was unloaded at a warehouse which had a railroad siding. There it was reloaded and shipped to the various cities.

Alcohol Variously Billed.

Usually it was billed to a real or fictitious company, in care of a warehouse. Many warehouse men have been indicted for receiving and delivering it. The alcohol was variously billed as machinery, varnish, paint, silicate of soda, lubricating oil, cotton seed oil, disinfectant, conduit paint, salad oil, cooking oil, lacquer and liquid soap. The billing would conform to the business of the real or supposed company to which it was consigned.

Alcohol actually distilled at the Superior plant was simply trucked to the warehouse, where it was loaded on cars, and the same procedure enacted.

This manipulation required the collusion of the storekeeper gauger at the plant, the Deputy Revenue Collector, who conveyed alcohol from the plant to the warehouse, and the collusion of many railroad employes. Hence, Ulysses Shank, the guager, is among the indicted, also are Charles E. Cummings and Alfred A. Oertel, deputy revenue collectors at Cleveland; Earnest P. Flynn, captain of railroad police for the New York Central, a car checker and a switch crew at Cleveland, and seven yard employes at St. Paul and Minneapolis.

Late in 1923 several drums of alcohol not fully denatured were seized in New York and traced to the Superior. The company pleaded an inadvertence, but its permit was revoked. A few weeks later, however, through influences yet to be revealed, the permit was reinstated in full force.

Prosperity Caused Suspicion.

Throughout 1924 the business expanded, with the establishment of new "rings" in additional cities, until the syndicate's very prosperity caused suspicion to be directed to it, as has been explained, for every gallon of grain alcohol which the syndicate secretly shipped it had to sell openly a gallon of denatured alcohol in order to make the record of sales tally with the record of manufacture and purchases. So much grain alcohol was being sold to bootleggers that it was difficult to find a market for a corresponding amount of denatured. So the syndicate cut the price of the latter.

When Thomas E. Stone, chief enforcement agent, and District Attorney Bernsteen learned that Superior was selling denatured at 15 cents less than the market price and lower than grain alcohol could be bought, they became suspicious and set a watch upon the plant early in 1925. Positive evidence was not obtained.

However, in June, 1925, an honest New York Central detective observed on a siding near the warehouse of a transfer company a car marked "machinery," on which the doors had been nailed together. It was billed to Chicago. He opened it, found it filled with alcohol in metal drums, ordered it moved to another siding and notified Stone and Bernsteen. He detailed three detectives to watch it.

Soon after nightfall a truck with a dozen men appeared, presenting what purported to be an order from Stone to deliver the alcohol to them. Obeying orders to the letter the detectives leveled their rifles at the truck and invited the occupants to beat it, which they accepted with alacrity. Of course, the order was a fake. Still there was not enough evidence against the Superior to indict.

But the greed and arrogance of the syndicate heads was soon to supply it. Among its large customers was Harry Volpe, who bought alcohol in carload lots at Chicago, and sold it to a "ring" which masked its operations behind a hair tonic factory. The seized car had been consigned to him. Volpe had paid $30,000 in advance, giving Ben Fogel $2,000 on May 25, and $10,000 on June 2. This was at the exceptionally high price of $6 a gallon.

When the car failed to arrive, Volpe made inquiries. He was told that pirates had "lifted" the car on the outskirts of Chicago. This being more than 400 miles from Cleveland, he was not entitled to his money back, but he squealed so loudly that Fogel gave him a check for $5000 (which is now in the District Attorney's possession). Volpe pushed his inquiries and discovered that the car had been seized in Cleveland. Under the terms of the guarantee, he was entitled to full repayment.

He went to Philadelphia, but couldn't find either of the "big four." He got Fogel's wife on the telephone and threatened to "squawk," but she told him to run along and peddle his pints.

He followed Fogel to Atlantic City, and thence to Cleveland, where he confronted Ben Gersonstein and Fogel in a room in the Hotel Cleveland, and told them if they didn't give him his money back he would go to the District Attorney. Gersonstein knocked him flatter than a rubber doormat, and Fogel shoved a pistol against his stomach and told him if they heard more talk like that they would finish him off. Volpe took his sore jaw, and $5000 check to a lawyer, who promptly took them to District Attorney Bernsteen.

This was all the District Attorney had been waiting for. On the following day, Aug. 13, Stone notified the officers of the Superior to have their books and employes on hand, as his office desired to make an inspection. They assembled to receive him, when he perceived they were all present, he gave a signal, and agents, Marshals and Deputy Collectors entered from all doors. At the same time squads entered the Prospect warehouse and raided the office of the Central Refining Co.

First Arrests in Raids.

Fourteen men were arrested. More than 15,000 gallons of grain alcohol was seized in the Superior plant, where it had been distilled. About 306,000 gallons of denatured alcohol, which Superior had obtained from the swo subsidiaries to mask anticipated sales of grain alcohol, was found in half a dozen warehouses over Cleveland. It subsequently was sold at public auction, the Government realizing $156,000 from it.

Since that date, more than 20 Federal investigators have been busy throughout the country untangling the treads of the syndicate's vast web, and lining up witnesses for the grand jury at Cleveland. Their most valuable single discovery was made in the Minnesota penitentiary, where they found Abe and Ben Gleeman, brothers, serving a life term for the murder of Burton Stevens, a pirate. The Gleemans were there than "sore;" they were ready to spill all they knew, which was plenty.

The Gleemans had ben employed by the Minneapolis-St. Paul "ring," at the head of which was Leon Gleckman, a wealthy gambler, and which they said, obtained full police protection through "Big Tom" Brown, a St. Paul detective and politician. They said the members of this ring divided each shipment between themselves, and also furnished large supplies to the bull's "ring," headed by "Big Mike" Atol.

Story of Murder in Case.

The Gleemans said that Stevens was known to have "lifted" a couple loads of alcohol from them, and they were looking for him. Ben met him on a downtown corner, but he got the drop on Ben, with two pistols. Just then Miller, a New York gunman, supported by the "ring" to fight pirates, arrived, and he filled Stevens full of lead before Stevens knew he was around. Both Gleemans declare that Abe Gleeman was in another part of town delivering a load of alcohol when the shooting occurred.

Ben Gleeman told the investigators he had wanted to tell this, but that Abe Ginsberg, a lawyer, employed by the "ring," advised him not to let the word alcohol creep into the trial or he would be convicted. Ben had been seen running from the scene. Both the Gleemans were indicted and offered alibi's, which the State punctured, and both were convicted. Ginsberg told them he would appeal, but waited until the last day, and then let them both go up for life. Sore, they were panting to tip the works.

The agents went to Atol's farm outside Duluth, and buried in a lake behind "Big Mike's" barn they found several dozen drums of alcohol. He, together with Ginsberg, Miller, Gleckman, "Big Tom" Brown, Nate Gleeman, father of Ben, and Abe, and 41 other men living in St. Paul and Minneapolis and 15 living in Duluth, have all been indicted, in addition to the members of the "rings," they include railroad employes, truck owners and drivers, warehouse men and railroad detectives. Ben and Abe Gleeman also are named as conspirators.

Evidence Comprehensive.

The evidence obtained from the Gleemans was even more comprehensive and direct than that given by Volpe. Among the incidents related by them was the seizure by St. Paul police of a truckload of alcohol, which was taken to the central police station. An hour later the Gleemans received a telephone call to be at a certain corner with an empty truck. When they arrived, "Big Tom" Brown was waiting them with another truck containing all the seized alcohol, but in new containers. When Federal officials later examined the containers both at the police station they found nothing but water in them.

The Federal grand jury convened here Feb. 4. More than 100 witnesses, summoned from all over the country, came to testify. To-112 indictments cover all those who have been named here, and scores beside.

The "big four" have given bond and are marshalling their millions to fight. Volpe came in the day the grand jury reported, pleaded guilty, and was released on bond pending sentence. Seventy-four of the 112 have been arrested, and Federal agents are combing the country for the remainder.

Meanwhile, the public may only wonder where the next big scandal will burst, and what new wrinkles it will show in the organized, commercial, highly profitable business of violating a law of the United States.

JUDGES HERE OPPOSE SYSTEM OF PAROLES

Circuit Bench Members Recommend Change at State Penitentiary and Reformatory.

Changes in the parole rules at both the State penitentiary and reformatory, to make it more difficult for inmates to obtain paroles, are recommended by the 16 Judges of the St. Louis Circuit Court in a report sent yesterday to the Missouri Association for Criminal Justice.

The report constitutes the reply of the Circuit Judges to a questionnaire sent each of them. It was prepared by Judges Rosskopf, Frey and Miller and unanimously approved by their associates.

"The parole system at the Poonville Reformatory does not work satisfactorily," says the report. "There is too much leniency in granting paroles. We disapprove of the furlough and merit system and recommend that they be discontinued."

The Judges believe that boys should not be paroled until they have served at least a year in the Reformatory, and if second offenders they should not be paroled at all.

As to the penitentiary, they favor a law requiring prisoners to serve at least one-third of their sentence before being eligible to parole, and repeaters at last one-half of their sentences. They approve of an intermediate reformatory for young men between 18 and 25 years of age.

Commenting on their experience with jurymen, in answer to questions, the judges say:

"The more intelligent jurors are not willing to serve, as a rule, and often seek to be excused. Many business men are now being urged to serve on juries, and they in turn require men in their employ, who are called, to serve. This has resulted in some improvement in the last two years.

"Jurors are moved frequently by maudlin sentiment. They allow themselves to be deceived by false alibis. They sometimes give wholly inadequate punishment. Frequently they do not understand the proceedings and particularly the instructions. Sometimes they are afraid, particularly in gang cases, in which jurors are at times intimidated."

The judges approve of a recommendation to grant circuit judges the power of summing up the evidence and orally charging the jury at the conclusion of the case, as is done in Federal courts.

BABY EXCUSE FOR NOT VOTING

Australian Compulsory Election Law Waived for Some Mothers.

By the Associated Press.

ADELAIDE, South Australia, March 20.—A woman who has to stay at home to care for her baby is exempt from punishment under the new Australian compulsory voting law, which provides for fines up to $10 for electors who do not vote. This ruling has been made by the South Australian authorities charged with enforcing the law in the case of the Federal elections held last November.

In Adelaide fines of 10 shillings each (about $2.50) were imposed on 135 electors, while various excuses were accepted in 6400 cases.

NEW SCHEME TO KEEP THOMPSON AT LIBERTY

Convicted Contractor's Lawyer Will Plead for Probation Due to Ill Health.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

CHICAGO, March 20.—Issuance of a mandate today committing John W. Thompson, millionaire St. Louis railroad contractor, to the Federal penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kan., under his two-year sentence for conspiracy to defraud the Government in Veterans' Bureau hospital contracts, was a formality to pave the way for his application to Federal District Court here for probation.

Thompson is in a serious condition at St. Luke's Hospital, St. Louis, following a major operation, which, it is contended by his attorneys and physicians, is justification for relieving him from serving his term. The mandate was issued by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals.

Announcement several days ago that the mandate would be issued had been misconstrued as meaning the probation request would be denied, but it is explained now that the District Court could not take up this application until the mandate was issued.

It is expected the probation petition will be heard possibly on April 2, or later.

"Tantamount to Death."

Bruce Johnstone, local counsel for Thompson and for Col. Charles R. Forbes, former director of the Veterans' Bureau, who was convicted and sentenced with Thompson, notified Federal authorities here of the proposed petition and declared that actual commitment of either of them to prison "would be tantamount to a death sentence."

However, Forbes dropped his effort and went to prison before commitment papers were issued for him. He was not admitted as a convict until the papers arrived there by mail today.

Probation to convicted men because of ill health or for other reasons formerly was granted by Federal District Judges under implied judicial power, but a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States held they did not have this right. To keep more than 2000 defendants who had been admitted to probation from going to prison, presidential pardons were issued for them.

Then Congress enacted a law, which became effective March 5, 1925, specifically giving District Judges probation authority.

Only Two Other Cases.

This law has been invoked in the nation only twice heretofore, once for a defendant named Nix, at San Francisco, and once for one named Kreybill, at Chicago. Kreybil was convicted of violating the national bankruptcy act and sentenced before the new law went into effect. The Circuit Court of Appeals ruled that the law applied to him, nevertheless. Therefore, it would apply to Thompson, who was sentenced Feb. 4, 1925.

A District Judge conceivably may hold that Thompson's physical condition entitles him to probation.

Forbes Begins Serving Two-Year Term at Leavenworth.

By the Associated Press.

LEAVENWORTH, Kan., March 20.—Charles R. Forbes, former head of the United States Veterans' Bureau, today became a prisoner at the Federal Penitentiary here. He began serving a two-year sentence for conspiring to defraud the Government.

Although only 47 years old, Forbes seemed much older. He limped as he walked slowly through the prison gates. A stroke of paralysis a year ago has stopped his once lively step.

After physicians' report next week about his state of health the Warden will decide what kind of work he will begin to do.

Forbes had little to say except to assure his keeper that he would "make the best of it." He said his nearest relative is his 90-year-old mother, who lives in Plymouth, Mass. "She's my only care in this world," he remarked.

Forbes was convicted last year in Chicago. He and John W. Thompson of St. Louis were found guilty of conspiring to defraud the Government.

French Nobleman Here

DUKE OF TREVISE.

DUKE ASKS ST. LOUIS TO ADOPT FRENCH CITY

Trevise Says Funds Are Necessary to Save Medieval Works of Art.

"Hundreds of medieaval French churches will be utterly destroyed in 10 or 20 years if something is not done," M. le Duc de Trevise shook his head, a look of anguish transfiguring for the moment his amiable brown eyes. Then he added, smiling, "there—there will be nothing in France for the American tourists to see."

The Duke of Trevise is in St. Louis, stopping at Hotel Statler, to organize a St. Louis committee of "La Sauvegardo de l'Art Francais," of which he is founder and president. Since the society was organized in 1921 it has acted in 235 cases to save treasures of art—paintings, statuary, cathedrals and one whole fortified village—from destruction by the ravages of time, official negligence or the vandalism of tradesmen.

Passes Judgment on Art Works.

It has held two exhibitions of national art in Paris, given material support and many gifts to 21 museums, and founded a center for judgment of objects d'art at Dijon, where its representative passes on objects sent to him to detect the spurious. It works in co-operation with the Ministry of Fine Arts, and the Duke of Trevise was commissioned by the French Government to carry his appeal to the United States.

"It is not only the wrack of time that we have to fear," said the Duke. "Cathedrals, churches, dwellings of the middle ages are being carried away piece by piece, a door, a banister or a stained-glass window at a time. They go to America, to England, and even to the French people themselves.

Dealers Steal Valuable Relics.

"Not the connoisseurs, but the dealers are at fault. Very clever persons, these dealers. In France they say, 'This Romanesque door came from a shelled village at the front. The building was wrecked; there was only this. I could not let it lie there on the ground.' What then. It is good; the connoisseur takes it. In Italy, where there were no shelled villages, it is always an earthquake that the dealer tells of.

"A great part of the work of the society is in getting buildings of historical or artistic value placed on the protected list of the Ministry of Fine Arts. In Italy nothing is paid to the owner of the house when it is so classified. That is as it should be, since the owner still may live in the house and enjoy it, but surely, as a work of the national genius, it should be preserved for the nation. In France the Ministry must pay an indemnity to the owner, and the Ministry has not much funds.

Finds Americans Generous.

"The American people I have found very generous. They see at once that great art is the world's treasure, and should be preserved where it is. New York, Buffalo, Detroit and Milwaukee each have adopted a town to be the special object of their protection. In Boston an admission was charged for my lecture, and the $500 thus raised was enough to buy outright three historic old chateaux at Condon, in the department of Gers.

"They will be restored, and to them will be brought for preservation many art treasures of the region. The first floor will be set aside for Americans, where they may be at home in France. There will be no cuisine, since that would cost too much, and we have not much money. But there will be a home, where Americans can stay as long as they like, and to see how the French people live, at home, I believe will do much for understanding between the nations.

To Confer With French Alliance.

"This idea I got after I came to the United States and began to see how generous are the Americans. 'How can we, some way, return this cordiality?' I asked. We hope in time to have a great number of these houses for American Students in the universities, and all through France, where Americans may come."

The Duke will confer here with members of the French Alliance as to what section St. Louisans might desire to adopt, and probably will lecture here under auspices of the French Society. He explained that in "adopting" a town or a region a committee was asked to contribute only if a particular emergency arose.

"We are like a poor man, who says, 'That I can have today, and this, perhaps, tomorrow'," explained the Duke. "What we have we use wherever is the greatest emergency, and sometimes we have not anything. Only last month my friends in France wrote me that I need not any longer talk about a little romanesque church in the Yonne," he concluded with a sigh. "It was—how do you say it?—tombe—collapsed."

Arrested for Chicken Stealing.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

POPLAR BLUFF, Mo., March 20.—The second arrest in the Stoddard County chicken stealing ring case was made today when officers arrested Charles McCracken near Taskee, in Wayne County. The first arrest in the case was the one that ended fatally for Bulah J. Leach, 30 years old, who was shot to death Wednesday while resisting the Sheriff and a deputy he had wounded. Taken to the Goodwin & Jean poultry plant today, McCracken was identified as the man who accompanied Leath several times when he sold stolen poultry there. There have been many thefts of poultry lately in which the thieves used gas to stupefy the fowls on the roost and prevent an outcry.

Leach was buried today at Brookland, Ark.

Philip Scheidemann a Dancer.

BERLIN, March 20.—Philip Scheidemann, the Socialist leader who proclaimed the German republic from the steps of the Reichstag building in November, 1918, and subsequently became Chancellor, is setting the pace for his parliamentary colleagues as an indefatiguable dancer despite his 62 years. The familiar erect figure of this white-haired statesman has been seen at almost every ball of note in Berlin this winter. He is as skilled in the modern steps as in waltzes of an earlier day and frequently stays on the dance floor until the early morning hours.

BASIS FOR STATE TAX ASSESSMENT IS $4,107,132,951

State Commission Raises Assessors' Figures by $65,440,025 — $114,643,968 Gain Over 1925

SHARP INCREASE FOR MOTOR VEHICLES

Their Total Value Is Put at $87,819,484 — Banks Denied Plea for Levies on Fractional Basis.

By the Jefferson City Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

JEFFERSON CITY, March 20.—Assessment of real estate and personal property in Missouri at $4,107,132,951 for 1926 taxes is recommended by the State Tax Commission in a report today to the State Board of Equalization on revision of the reports of local assessors. This is an increase of $65,440,025 over the valuations by local assessors for 1926 and an increase of $114,643,968 over the final assessment fixed by the Board of Equalization for 1925 taxes.

Recommendations of the Tax Commission are subject to revision by the board, which fixes the final assessments. Hearings will begin Monday before the board for counties seeking changes in the commission's recommendations. A sharp increase was made in the assessed valuation of motor vehicles in Missouri. The total of $87,819,484 recommended by the commission is a gain of $18,046,976 over the assessment of automobiles last year.

Farm land assessments were fixed by the commission at $1,515,453,678, an increase of $38,955,163 over the local assessor's valuations, but a reduction of $7,566,311 from the assessment for last year. Assessment of town lots, city and town real estate, was placed at $1,909,918,333 by the commission, an increase of $137,795,668 over the assessors' valuation and a gain of $115,421,802 over last year.

Bank Claims Rejected.

The commission assessed personal property, including motor vehicles, at $681,760,940, an increase of $12,689,194 over the assessors' valuations and an increase of $6,788,477 over the total last year.

Claims of some of the banks in St. Louis and 71 of the 114 counties that they were entitled to return their capital stock, surplus and undivided profits on a fractional assessment basis, similar to that followed for other classes of property, were rejected by the commission, which ordered assessment of the banks on a full value basis. This placed the bank assessment at $145,331,369, an increase of $5,037,890 over the returns by the banks to the local assessors.

A fight to obtain less than full valuation has been made by the banks each year for several years, and will be renewed before the Board of Equalization next week, when a delegation representing the State Bankers' Association will appear. The banks have contended that their assessments on a full value basis are discriminatory, when other classes of property are assessed on a fractional basis in practice, although theoretically at full value. The only change made in the St. Louis assessment was the addition of $1,954,553 for banks that returned fractional assessments. This made the bank stock assessment for St. Louis $64,342,363.

Assessment of the real estate and personal property in St. Louis totaled $1,067,306,553, or 25.9 per cent of the total for the state. The St. Louis figure includes $903,562,060 for real estate and $163,743,493 for personal property. Assessment of motor vehicles, included in personal property, totaled $26,235,480 in the city.

St. Louis County Figures.

St. Louis County, which reported $163,464,740 in realty and personal property, was given an increase of $1,802,087 on motor vehicles. This made a total of $5,406,262 for motor vehicles in the county. Most of the $115,421,802 increase in the assessment of city real estate was made in the four principal cities, St. Louis, Kansas City, St. Joseph and Springfield, the commission stated. The commission raised the assessors' reports on farm lands in 35 counties from 5 to 10 per cent.

An increase of 25 per cent on Ray County and 40 per cent on Vernon County on farm land assessments was recommended. For years Vernon County has returned small fractional assessments and each year the board raises the assessment.

The commission recommended the Vernon County report of $13,511,156 be raised $18,915,618 and the valuation of $2,540,455 for town lots be increased to $4,572,837, an increase of 80 per cent.

Other Recommendations.

Recommendations by the commission on items making up personal property, and the comparison with the assessment for last year include the following:

EUROPE
Via Montreal-Quebec

1000 miles less at sea!

Take the St. Lawrence route to Europe! You embark at Montreal or Quebec. Then, on placid waters, between green banks and clustering villages, you glide away toward Europe through quaintest inland Canada.

This is the short route—the sheltered route—the historic route. Plan to go and return by it—or, if you're already booked across, take it for the trip home. Frequent sailings on the Canadian Pacific steamships—to Liverpool, Southampton, Belfast, Cobh, Glasgow, Cherbourg, Antwerp, or Hamburg. "Empress" steamships from Quebec. Monoclass cabin steamships from Montreal and Quebec.

Average of 3 Sailings a Week

A Dining Room Group of Distinguished Simplicity

Where better could you match the modern trend than in the Tudor period? And, fortunately, your choice may be economical, too—while still in the best of taste.

In producing this ten-piece, walnut group, its makers have depended on the beauty of its matched banding and panelling in figured English Pollard Oak—rather than on more elaborate and expensive carving. The result is a soundly built group of fine furniture . . . matching the spirit of the times . . . yet well within moderate means.

Details include a 66-inch length for the Buffet . . . sliding linen trays in the serving table . . . extension of the main table itself to eight feet . . . figured tapestry for the chairs . . . while those of a practical turn will appreciate the interior drawer construction in solid, quarter-sawed white oak.

TEN PIECES . . . PRICED AT $375
Dining Room Table • Buffet • Serving Table • China Cabinet • Arm Chair • 5 Side Chair

Suggested Rugs and Draperies for this Furniture Group

A Chinese Rug, with neutral background, is the choice of Kennard's Interior Decorators—with Glass Curtains of Sunfast, Gold Filet Net—and Draperies of Black and Gold Damask with red lacquered stripe . . . the latter in new Chinese effects of very charming design.

ANSWERS TO QUERIES

The Post-Dispatch reserves the right to reject any query. Personal and telephone calls, or answers by mail, cannot be given attention, except letters on medical questions of undoubted sincerity when accompanied by stamped addressed envelope.

A READER. — Rogers Hornsby led the National Baseball League for six years in batting average.

MR. ANXIOUS.—The half-dime dated 1855 is worth from 50c to 55c.

M. F.—The 10-cent piece dated 1853 is worth from 10c to 15c. The half dime dated 1853 is worth from 5c to 10c.

A POST-DISPATCH SUBSCRIBER.—Rogers Hornsby and Bottomley both were named on Babe Ruth's all-American team.

A READER OF THE POST-DISPATCH.—Inquire of David Russell, Manager Municipal Theater Association, 878 Arcade Bldg., regarding the chorus training for the Municipal Operas this summer.

JAMES M.—It is said that John F. Wixford introduced the process to eliminate mud and bacteria from the St. Louis water supply just before the World's Fair here. He was heralded by business men and scientists as the man who saved the city at a critical period of its history, when the fair was approaching and the water department was desperately attempting to eliminate the mud and bacteria from the river water.

HOUSEWIFE. — Saturate the moth-infested stuffed furniture and rugs with naphtha. Do this in the open air if possible, and after several days have elapsed repeat the operation, as the eggs may not all have been destroyed at the first trial. Lay over the moth-eaten spots in the carpet several thicknesses of cloth wrung from hot water and place hot irons upon the cloths. Allow them to stand 10 or 12 minutes at a time that the steam may penetrate every part. After this has been done pour on naphtha.

R. E. P.—To clean pewter articles pour hot lye or wood ashes upon the tin, throw on sand and rub with a hard, woolen cloth, or whisk until all particles of dirt have been dissolved. To polish pewter plates it is well to have the turner make similar wooden forms fitting the plates and to rub them clean this way. Next they are rinsed with clean water and placed on a table with a clean linen cover on which they are left to dry without being touched, otherwise spots will appear. This scouring is not necessary so often if the pewter is rubbed with wheat bran after use and cleaned perfectly.

LEGAL INFORMATION

(By a Member of the St. Louis Bar Association.)

INTERESTED.—Consult a lawyer. She may have grounds for a damage suit.

DAILY READER. — We would call the man in question a 100 per cent German.

JOHN G.—A has no right to remove the wire from the division fence and sell it.

CURIOUS. — We would advise you to employ an attorney to collect the damage suit.

J. H.—It would take at least one year to settle an estate after the will has been probated.

H. E. P.—If he made a will leaving everything to his wife, his relatives will not receive any part of his estate.

P. D.—Write to the Prohibition Enforcement Office, Chicago, Ill., or Washington, D. C., for the information.

P. N.—She had no right to take the money. You and your other sons and daughters are entitled to equal share of it.

AL.—You have a right to refuse him admittance to your house, even though your sister is there. If he makes any trouble call the police.

JEAN.—Report the facts to the police or to the City Counsellor's office in the Municipal Courts Building, Fourteenth and Market streets.

ONO. — Your husband will be entitled to a child's share of your estate, unless you divorce him. In your case a child's share would be one-fifth.

H. W. R.—There is no workmen's compensation law in force in Missouri. He may have grounds for a suit for damages against his employer, however; she should consult a lawyer regarding this.

F. A. B.—As B never had a garnishment summons served on C, A's present employer, C will have to pay the 10 per cent to D, who has served him with a garnishee's summons.

ALIEN —The real estate which is owned by the alien in violation of the law could be forfeited to the State. (2) If he made any false answer under oath he could be fined or imprisoned—otherwise he would not be liable to punishment.

MEDICAL QUESTIONS

Health and sanitation questions of public interest only will be considered. Diagnosis or treatment of individual cases will not be given.

J. W.—The one and only thing for your complete and perfect relief is an operation.

C. C. M.—The city chemist, Municipal Courts Building, will make the test for you. A chemical analysis is the only way to determine just what the trouble is, if any.

AN OLD READER.—You most likely have a recurrence of neuritis, i. e., an inflammation of the nerves. Try the following remedy for which is moist heat locally applied. This is best done by bath towels wrung out of water as hot as can be borne, hot water bags and the electric pad.

MRS. —Since you express willingness to consult a physician, we feel that this would be so much more likely to insure satisfactory results than any suggestions we could make. We will not offer anything in the way of treatment, but advise that you consult a specialist instead.

JACKIE.—Excessive oil in the hair is caused by excessive activity of the sebaceous or fat secreting glands, the normal function of which is to soften and lubricate the skin and hair, keeping it soft and preventing cracking of the skin and brittleness of the hair. Dissolve small cake of castile soap in 1 pint of warm water, to which add 1 tablespoonful of borax and 10 drops of ammonia. Mix and use such quantity as may be necessary for shampoo, repeating about once a week. For enlarged pores procure a prescription of compound aseptinol ointment and rub on once daily, preferably at bed time.

WHEAT PRICE DOWN AT THE WEEK-END

ST. LOUIS MERCHANTS' EXCHANGE, March 20.—Wheat futures closed lower at the final session of the week. May corn was up, but other deliveries down. Reports of favorable domestic wheat crop conditions proved prime bearish influence on market. Prices recovered from the lows.

In the local cash grain market soft wheat was weak and sharply lower. Sales being made at 5c to 6c under prices asked previous day at finish, but even at new basis all was not taken. Hard declined 3½c, there being limited demand for light offerings. No. 1 hard sold after the close at $1.64 destination weights. A lot of 5000 bushels No. 2 hard 12½ per cent protein sold to arrive basis 12c over Kansas City May price delivered. 1 car do at $1.67 delivered and 25,000 bushels No. 2 hard 13 per cent protein sold late yesterday on private terms. Cash corn was ¼c to 2½c lower but a better tone prevailed. Local industries were warm buyers. Oats declined ½c to 1c, offerings being cleaned up closely at the decline on good demand.

Rye was unsettled fractionally higher and then ranged down more than 2c, but recovered about half of loss. July was fractionally lower. Liverpool wheat closed 2d to 2¼d lower, but the decline was not as great as some anticipated. Winnipeg early was 1c to 1¼c lower. Corn here was lower.

May wheat opened at $1.58¼, July wheat $1.36⅜. September wheat $1.32⅝. May corn 71¼c and July corn 76c.

The three Northwestern markets combined today had 308 cars of wheat, compared with 613 a week ago and 443 last year. Minneapolis receiving 141 cars, Duluth 50 cars and Winnipeg 111 cars.

Local wheat receipts, which were 49,000 bushels, compared with 61,000 a week ago and 123,500 last year. Included 33 cars local and 2 through. Corn receipts, which were 29,400 bushels, compared with 56,000 a week ago and 42,000 last year. included 17 cars local and 4 through. Oats receipts, which were 72,000 bushels, compared with 44,000 a week ago and 90,000 last year. Included 15 cars local and 21 through. Rye receipts were 16 cars local and 12 through.

Primary receipts of wheat were 557,000 bushels, compared with 468,000 a week ago and 528,000 last year. Corn receipts were 716,000 bushels, compared with 785,000 a week ago and 423,000 last year. Oats receipts were 398,000 bushels, compared with 351,000 a week ago and 388,000 last year. Wheat shipments were 378,000 bushels, compared with 370,000 a week ago and 618,000 last year. Corn shipments were 312,000 bushels, compared with 345,000 a week ago and 376,000 last year. Oats shipments were 446,000 bushels, compared with 393,000 a week ago and 528,000 last year.

WHEAT DOWN FOR DAY AND ALSO THE WEEK

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

CHICAGO, March 20.—Wheat closed today ¾c to 2½c lower and for the week 4¼c to 5¾c off. New May, $1.57⅝, old, $1.56¼; July, $1.38⅜ to $1.38; September, $1.32⅛ to $1.32½. Wheat opened firmer today due to covering by nervous shorts because of the failure of Liverpool to follow our advance yesterday. The bulge liquidation again developed and as prices declined stop loss selling added to the weakness. After the first hour there had been a good rally as a result of short covering and reinstatement of lines credited to the East. Offerings brought out further selling by discouraged holders and lowest prices for the week were established in the subsequent downturn. Export sale there was little demand for wheat early but later reports told of Portugal buying 350,000 bushels of Manitobas. Mills bought 6000 bushels locally. Receipts in the West and Southwest are increasing and the Canadian crop market is reporting sales of carried-over wheat from Friday. Crop news continues bearish.

Corn trade was active and the market showed more resistance to selling, closing at the top, ¾c to ⅞c higher but 1½c to 2c lower for the week. May 73¾c to 74c, July, 77¾c to 77⅞c; September, 79¼c to 79⅜c. Shortly after the opening there was continued liquidation by discouraged longs and low values for the season were established. Heavy profit taking by shorts rallied prices to above the previous close when some selling by early buyers checked the upturn. Shipping demand was better with sales of 44,000 bushels but the East canceled odd sales of 8000 bushels also.

Local trade was quiet and prices moved within a narrow range. Weakness in other grains caused some pressure but removal of hedges against cash sales and good offerings after a moderate dip. Shipping sales were 107,000 bushels. The close was unchanged to ⅛c higher and for the week 1¼c to 1½c lower.

Lard was fairly steady but meats were heavy under liquidation. At the close lard was 24½c higher to 24½c lower; ribs 17½c lower; bellies, 17½c to 27½c lower.

FRUIT MARKET
Apple Market Quiet and Basis Unchanged.

ST. LOUIS PRODUCE ROW, March 20.—The apple market was quiet as usual at week-end and prices unchanged. The rainy weather late yesterday checked business. The outside carlot demand was quiet. WHEAT DOWN FOR DAY AND ALSO THE WEEK

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

CHICAGO, March 20.—Wheat closed today ¾c to 2½c lower and for the week 4¼c to 5¾c off. New May, $1.57⅝, old, $1.56¼; July, $1.38⅜ to $1.38; September, $1.32⅛ to $1.32½. Wheat opened firmer today due to covering by nervous shorts because of the failure of Liverpool to follow our advance yesterday. The bulge liquidation again developed and as prices declined stop loss selling added to the weakness. After the first hour there had been a good rally as a result of short covering and reinstatement of lines credited to the East. Offerings brought out further selling by discouraged holders and lowest prices for the week were established in the subsequent downturn. Export sale there was little demand for wheat early but later reports told of Portugal buying 350,000 bushels of Manitobas. Mills bought 6000 bushels locally. Receipts in the West and Southwest are increasing and the Canadian crop market is reporting sales of carried-over wheat from Friday. Crop news continues bearish.

Corn trade was active and the market showed more resistance to selling, closing at the top, ¾c to ⅞c higher but 1½c to 2c lower for the week. May 73¾c to 74c, July, 77¾c to 77⅞c; September, 79¼c to 79⅜c. Shortly after the opening there was continued liquidation by discouraged longs and low values for the season were established. Heavy profit taking by shorts rallied prices to above the previous close when some selling by early buyers checked the upturn. Shipping demand was better with sales of 44,000 bushels but the East canceled odd sales of 8000 bushels also.

Local trade was quiet and prices moved within a narrow range. Weakness in other grains caused some pressure but removal of hedges against cash sales and good offerings after a moderate dip. Shipping sales were 107,000 bushels. The close was unchanged to ⅛c higher and for the week 1¼c to 1½c lower.

Lard was fairly steady but meats were heavy under liquidation. At the close lard was 24½c higher to 24½c lower; ribs 17½c lower; bellies, 17½c to 27½c lower.

At Moment of Weakness in Market Not Always Easy to Tell Whether Declines Reflect Short Sales or Liquidation of Actual Holdings.

REACTIONARY TENDENCIES IN THE PRINCIPAL SECURITY AND COMMODITY MARKETS

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, March 20.

PRONOUNCED reactionary tendencies developed in nearly all the principal security and commodity markets this week. Stock prices sharpened the average of 20 leading industrials, sure carrying to within a small fraction of the year's low established in the sensational collapse earlier in the month. Wheat futures sold down 4 to 8 cents a bushel, corn and raw sugar options touched new low levels for the season, cotton marked recorded declines and French francs sank to the lowest level since 1924.

There were reaction in stocks naturally had a tendency to depress the business sentiment. In quarters where the stock market is accepted as a barometer of business, however, it received fears that a slump in trade was in progress, but with bank clearings, savings bank deposits and railroad loadings being maintained freight car of serious depression is looked for in the near future.

The credit situation continues relatively easy. Time money has been reduced during the week to 4½ per cent. Two new issues have prevailing since last October. All issues steady at 4¼ per cent all week, but rates for "outside market" were available below that figure.

By Leased Wire from the New York Bureau of the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, March 20.—The Evening Post in its weekly copyrighted financial review, says:

"Another week has passed without signs of a resumption of the upward movement in stocks, but with very definite indications that a liquidating period is on. It is not always easy to tell at the moment of weakness in a market whether the declines reflect short sales by bear traders who expect later to cover their positions or liquidation of stocks actually held. Diverse views were expressed even on the recession that started late in February, but certainly it must now be clear to all interpreters of the securities markets that a vast amount of stock had been unloaded in the last month. That short selling has proceeded in active fashion is plain enough, but it is in the volume of liquidation that greatest significance lies and on this the new loan figures shed interesting light. In the week that ended March 3, which covered the days of most drastic recession, loans to dealers and brokers reported by the Federal Reserve Bank here fell about $61,000,000, but now we learn that during the week ended March 10 such loans shrank another $163,000,000.

Decline in Loans.

"Loans of this character thus have been brought down for the first time this year to a level below $3,000,000,000, the March 10 total having been $2,885,669,000, and they are still falling. No careful student of the money situation would undertake now to say whether that volume of loans is or is not too large in the circumstances. As time goes on and a background gradually is formed against which to make comparisons, financial experts will find it possible to interpret the movements more intelligently. What the figures do show, and that right plainly, is the persistent downward trend in loans. Neither speculators nor investors are unloading all of their stocks, but they are reducing their commitments, and on bulges, instead of re-entering the market, stockholders use the opportunity to sell more stock. Each week of such liquidation places the market in a stronger position technically, and removes many dangers to the business situation that had been injected by the inflationary influences of the recent bull movement.

Effect of Loan Publications.

"Perhaps it was the desire on the part of our authorities at Washington to keep business on a sound basis for a long time to come and to protect the market from the evils of its own excesses that led them to call for the brokerage loan figures. Business has been good, but the fear was spreading that wild speculation in the stock market might eventually lift values to heights utterly dangerous and do harm to a trade position otherwise favorable. Perhaps we shall never know exactly what prompted the officials of the Federal Reserve Board to give us additional information on loans, but if curtailment of speculation was one of the motives the measure appears to have been effective. At any rate, it is worth noting that the liquidating movement in stocks had its beginning bout the time that the loan computations came into the limelight of discussion. What we must avoid at this period is to draw conclusions on the general status of trade too hastily from what has happened in the stock market. In the long run the rise and fall of stocks discounts the future of business, but there are occasions, of which the present is a good example, when we cannot rely too strongly on the stock market to tell us what is going to happen in industry.

Possible Misinterpretation.

"It is quite possible that a continued decline in stocks may actually turn sentiment and dampen the enthusiasm of our business leaders. On looking at the liquidation of the period industrialists may draw the inference that hard times lie ahead, for, they may reckon, the stock market is a barometer of the future and its trend now forecasts marked contractions in business activity. If men generally view the situation from that light they may bring on a reduction in trade, of course, and never know that what actually forced stocks down was a credit situation rather than any pronounced change in business.

Market Irregular Saturday.

"Prices of speculative securities moved uncertainly in confused trading on the stock market today. Although selling pressure was again apparent in some of the stocks that had been weakened by recent declines, good support was evident in other parts of the list. Oil shares were in rather good demand in response to reports that other mergers were under consideration. California Petroleum General, Asphalt and Pan-American shares improved, while Union Pacific, Atchison, Atlantic Coast Line and some of the other rails did better. Little of interest transpired in quiet dealings in the bond market. Some of the convertible oil issues, such as Sinclair 6½s, were higher in sympathy with stocks.

Foreign Exchanges Irregular.

"Fluctuations were narrow and irregular in quiet trading in foreign exchanges. Sterling was fractionally higher and Belgian francs rallied on reports that negotiations for a loan had been abandoned for the time being. Lire also showed improvement, but French francs were barely steady around the year's low level.

Rallying Power Weak.

"Despite scattered coverings by traders who had sold for a decline and desired to take profits the market showed little rallying power and prices continued to sag in the last hour. Increased offerings of several of the market leaders discouraged attempts to check the decline. General Motors was depressed to new low ground for the movement and Dupont slipped back in sympathy, losing about 2 points in the drop to below 214. Several high-priced industrials were freely offered by speculators for the decline, who centered their attack on these stocks in the belief they were the most vulnerable because they had advanced the most. Woolworth reached new low ground for the year with a setback of more than 2 points. Hudson Motors continued to fall to new low levels for the year, with little support evident. Chrysler and Dodge shares were somewhat easier, while Jordan slipped back after a rally.

New York Bank Statement.

"An increased demand for funds for midmonth settlements was reflected in the weekly statement of the Clearing House banks, which showed a decline in surplus of $15,961,000 and a drop in the excess reserve to $11,134,680. Loans, discounts, etc., decreased $13,227,000.

ONLY FEATURES IN INDIVIDUAL STOCK MOVES

Mercantile Trust Shares Sell at Highest Price in Many Years—Local Exchange Rather Uninteresting During Week.

ST. LOUIS STOCK EXCHANGE, March 20.—The local stock market as a whole was an uninteresting affair the past week. Transactions were not large, though slightly better than the previous week. An examination of the net changes at the close of the week revealed that the number of securities showing losses for the period were more than double those in which gains were recorded. A fair number, however, were unchanged. The largest turnover took place in Consolidated Lead, sales aggregating more than 1500 shares. The stock closed the week at 26, which was a point and half under the previous week. Sheffield Steel at 27 was fractionally up for the week.

There were two or three individual moves that attracted attention though the transactions were limited. One was the sale of Mercantile Trust at 425, the highest it has sold in more than score of years. Another was the transaction in Johnson, Stephens, Shinkle at 74 as compared with 65 earlier in month. Just a small lot sold at the above mentioned price. Scruggs common was a third but this stock was lower, selling at 27, a loss of 3 points.

International Shoe, Brown Shoe and Hamilton Brown were lower. Huttig stock also was down. The latter stock as well as Missouri Portland ranged down 3 points.

ST. LOUIS STOCKS

ST. LOUIS STOCK EXCHANGE, March 20.—Total sales of stocks on the exchange during the past week amounted to 7684 shares, compared with 7333 last week. Bond sales were $14,000, against $43,400 a week ago.

Following is a complete list of securities traded in on the exchange during the past week, dividend rates, sales, highest, lowest, closing prices and net changes being given:

HEAVY TONE ON CURB GENERAL PAST WEEK

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, March 20.—Decided strength accompanied by fairly active trading in the oil division of the Curb Exchange today was in sharp contrast to the general trend of prices that prevailed in the other groups. Public Utilities were inclined to be easier on the usual small offerings. General Gas and Electric was in early supply and sold off 3 points. Electric Bond and Share declined a point and lower figures appeared in United Gas and Improvement and United Light.

Moderate strength was shown in a few industrials, which included a 3-point advance in Continental Baking "A." Bloomingdale common and preferred issues held steady. Tubize Artificial Silk declined 20 points, selling to 280, but recovered almost that amount on a later rally.

In the oils, Vacuum and Humble scored early advances, while Standard Oil of New York suffered a further loss of one point, selling to 32¾. Ohio Oil was declined, which issued, showed increased activity.

The tone on the curb market generally during the week was heavy, there being a steady crumbling away of values in many issues which had for a long time been prominent in speculative affairs, but strength was shown at times in other stocks, making them exceptions. Among these were Safety Car Heat and Light, which made a gain of over 4 points, while many other stocks declined, and Southern Ice and Utilities "A," which moved up over 3 points.

A dozen or more active issues on the various declines from the beginning of the week made a new low record for the year, but many still remained substantially above the lower records made on the heavy selling two weeks ago. Some of the specialties were without nearby demand, a feature being American Seating Co., which Friday sold at 251, a loss of 4 points from the sale made a week ago. Buyers dropped 30 points in the end of Florida, which has been declining steadily for some time, dropped 4 points to the new low record of 90.

Many of the public utilities yielded from 2 to 10 points during the week.

Dollar Highest Ever in Paris.

By the Associated Press.

PARIS, March 20.—The franc continued its downward trend today and a new low record low at 123.83 to the dollar and 137.83 to the pound-sterling.

Importers having payments to make abroad at the end of the month disquieted by the uncertain situation in Parliament, began precipitate buying yesterday, and continued today.

This demand for foreign exchange, together with the sale of French francs by Belgium engaged in supporting their own franc, sent the dollar and pound to the highest point ever reached here.

Washington's Pulp Industry Increases.

By the Associated Press.

SEATTLE, Wash., March 20.—Washington's paper pulp industry has increased to a $15,000,000 annual production, statistics compiled by Clancy M. Lewis, manager of the Manufacturers' Association of Washington, show. There are eleven mills in the state, three of these starting last year, in Bellingham, Anacortes and Longview.

$7,500,000 Sao Paulo Issue Next Week.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, March 20.—Bankers announced that $7,500,000 Sao Paulo external waterworks 30-year 7 per cent bonds would be offered in this market next Tuesday announced that $7500 Sao Paulo, external day at a price of 96½, simultaneously with the sale of £2,500,000 of the loan in London. Speyer Company will head the American syndicate.

LITTLE LIFE TO TRADE ON BOND MARKET

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, March 20.—Extremely narrow price fluctuations gave the bond market a lifeless appearance today. Some of the most active issues drifted fractionally lower but enough of the sidelines showed elsewhere to hold the general list fairly steady.

In speculative interest, in oil company obligations was given the announcement of the proposed merger of the Standard Oils of New York and the General Petroleum Corporation, representing the fourth major consolidation in the oil industry recently. Ohio 6½s rebounded 3½ points and most of the Sinclair issues advanced a point or so.

In the railroad bonds selling pressure was directed principally against Seaboard Air Line issues. This road's first 4s broke almost three points, and the 6 per cent bonds about two points. Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific issues, Erie, Delaware & Hudson, Denver & Rio Grande and Frisco showed an easier tendency. Traction company obligations continued to sag but a slump in the Manhattan Avenue Railway adjustment 5s was offset by a sharp upturn in the company's refunding 4s. Chicago Railways 5s almost made a new low record for the year at 71 but subsequently rallied.

MEDICAL EXPERTS SAY MATTEOTTI DIED OF WOUNDS

Italian Socialist Deputy Had Been Injured With Pointed Weapon, According to Crown Witnesses.

CHIETI, Italy, March 20.—Giacomo Matteotti died from wounds inflicted with a pointed weapon, according to evidence given today by medical experts in the trial of Amerigo Dumini and four others charged with the death of Matteotti.

The coat of Matteotti, when examined by the police and surgeons, showed blood stains and cuts and indicated that the Socialist Deputy died from an attack, according to the evidence.

This evidence was the most telling blow which the Crown has yet delivered against the defense, for it tends to break down the story of Dumini that Matteoti died from a hemorrhage, caused by the excitement of his kidnaping. Police evidence was also introduced showing that a blood stained knife and a bomb had been found in the hotel where Dumini resided.

Evidence a Surprise.

This evidence came as a surprise, for it had been understood that the Crown had completed its evidence. Dumini and his co-defendants, from the prisoners' cage, greeted the medical testimony with indifference. Signor Farinacci, secretary of the Fascist party and counsel for Dumini, is expected to attempt to discredit the evidence.

The submission of testimony was completed this evening with the reading by Judge Danza of the experts' judgment that the finger prints on the pane of glass in the car in which Matteotti was abducted had been identified as those of Dumini and Aloino Volpi, another defendant. The court adjourned until Monday afternoon after an outline of the argument for the defense was presented—first, that none of the accused had participated in the crime, and, second, if a crime had been committed, it was unintentional and on grave provocation.

Farinacci, for the defense, when court was resumed today, continued directing the exposition of Matteotti's alleged antinational activities and exhibited a German translation of Matteotti's book, "One Year of Fascist Domination."

Deputy Bruno Cassinelli testified regarding the search for Matteotti's body after his kidnaping on June 10, 1924. He also described the report, which was afterward denied, that Giacomo Acerbo, then Under-Secretary of State to Premier Mussolini, telephoned to a hospital ward inquiring about an injured person.

Auto Inspected.

The Judge and jury left the courtroom and entered another room where is kept the automobile in which Matteotti was kidnaped. This the jury examined closely, particularly a broken window and other damage, while the Judge read the findings of the investigation tending to show that the machine had been the scene of an unusual occurrence.

Farinacci yesterday drew a picture of Matteotti as a dangerous enemy of the nation, unrelenting in his advocacy of Socialist extremism.

To the Judge's interjection "but this has no bearing on the Matteotti matter in hand," Farinacci replied: "It has for us since we shall show the reason why Matteotti and not another was struck."

Encouraged by Farinacci's boldness some of the witnesses fired back at Judge Danza, explaining that they were trying to contrast the nefarious actions of Matteotti's friends with the patriotism of the Fascists.

Feruccio Vecchi, a former army captain, declared: "If Matteotti's friends were saints, we were malefactors worthy of prison."

Most of the witnesses as they left the stand turned toward the prisoner's cage and bowed greetings. The frequent clashes between the Judge and lawyers, however were not acrimonious, and defense counsel remarked after a verbal encounter: "I have never seen such a courteous Judge."

Nor I such an able lawyer," Judge Danza rejoined.

Four Jockeys and Three Owners Ruled Off Turf for Life

STUTTS ONE OF RIDERS PENALIZED

Action Follows Investigation by Kentucky Racing Association Started After Race Last December.

By the Associated Press.

LEXINGTON, Ky., March 20.—Kentucky's turf scandal resulted today in ruling off for life of seven persons, four jockeys and three owners and trainers, by the Kentucky State Racing Commission.

The four jockeys "ruled off the turf for life and denied all privileges" are Harry Stutts, Grover Noel, James Wallace and Bert Harvey. The owners and trainers are P. J. and R. D. Williams, brothers, and Tom Devereaux.

The committee also refused to accept the stewards' recommendation that Jockey Donald Mergler be restored to good standing.

Mergler is the rider who, when questioned about his ride on Bumpkin in a race at Latonia last Oct. 10, confessed that he was given $1000 to pull the horse. J. A. Mooney, another jockey, gave him the money, he said. The confession was the starting point of the commission's attempt to clean up racing in Kentucky. At a December meeting the commission ruled Mergler and Mooney off for life.

Williams brothers were granted the privilege of selling their horse at public auction.

For Good of the Game.

The Racing Commission secretary, W. S. Sherwood, declined to divulge any information concerning the charges, and the only reason he gave was that the action was "for the best interest of the turf."

"Jockeys Bert Harvey, Grover Noel, James Wallace and Harry Stutts are ruled off the turf for life, and denied all privileges.

"The recommendation of the stewards that Jockey D. Mergler be reinstated is denied.

"Owners R. G. Williams, P. J. Williams and Tom Devereaux are ruled off the turf for life and denied all privileges.

"Messrs. Williams are granted the privilege to sell their horses at bona fide public auctions."

Dates for the Kentucky Jockey Club and Kentucky Association tracks were approved:

Lexington—April 24 to May 5, (10 days).

Churchill Downs—May 8 to May 21 (20 days).

Latonia—June 3 to July 6 (28 days).

$1000 STANDARD FEE FOR THROWING RACE

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, March 20.—The exclusion of four jockeys and three owners and trainers from the turf for alleged fixing of races, by the Kentucky State Racing Commission is merely the beginning of a "general housecleaning," the New York Telegram said today, forecasting that the reform movement would hit the metropolitan racing center next.

One thousand dollars to guarantee the defeat of a horse was the standard fee for "throwing" a race asserted the paper, which printed what purported to be a confession signed by Jockey Wallace, one of the four riders ruled off the turf. Admission of fixing races at Latonia appear in the alleged confession.

The method of fixing the race was invariably the same, said the Telegram—the payment of money to riders for their promise not to permit the horses they were riding to win.

Jockey Wallace was the most extensively involved and he was finally undone by a race track bootler, the paper continued. Wallace's confession then followed. It is claimed, incriminating other jockeys and the owner for whom Wallace rode, R. D. Williams.

Stutts was one of the most skillful jockeys on the track, and barring two apprentices, rode more winners than any other jockey in any section last year. He is under contract to the Audley Farms Stable owned by Montfort and B. B. Jones.

Stutts was recently reinstated by the Miami Stewards after having been repeatedly fined and finally having his license revoked for rough riding.

The one sidedness of the final was a surprise to Farrel's followers after his success in his matches yesterday with Archie Compston, British professional champion and Gene Sarazan, Metropolitan titleholder.

R. L. Mathews Considered As New St. Louis U. Coach

Billikens Likely to Select Athletic Director Within Two Weeks—Idaho Football Teacher, to Confer With Blue and White Board This Week.

The trials of St. Louis University athletic officials in selecting a coach to succeed Dan Savage seem to be nearnig a crisis and a definite choice will probably be named in the next two weeks.

An Associated Press dispatch from Spokane, Wash., yesterday divulged the news that R. L. Mathews, for the past four years football coach at the University of Idaho, is being considered for the job. Mathews will be in town sometime during the coming week it was learned, to confer with the Athletic Board. The State institution is located in Moscow, Idaho.

The Billiken board members will not discuss the matter beyond admitting that they are seeking a coach and that Mathews is under consideration but it is believed that he is the most likely candidate for the position. Several other men are also being looked over.

Whoever the new man is, he will assume the allround duties of ath-

FORMER SENATOR SOUTHPAW BLANKS NATIONAL LEAGUE TEAM FOR FIVE INNINGS

Sisler Gets Three Hits Out of Four Times at Bat and Rice a Triple and Single in Two Chances—Durst Drives in Two Runs.

By John E. Wray,
Sports Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

TARPON SPRINGS, Fla., March 20.—George Sisler's flag hopes gave their first flash of 1926 pennant form this afternoon when they leveled the cocky and hitherto victorious Boston Braves 5 to 1. Dave Bancroft's team of live wires which has been running away with the "Coconut League" race with six victories and one defeat up to today were outpitched, outhit and outplayed throughout the contest.

Only on the bases did the Browns fall down, with Harry Rice and Catcher Dixon the outstanding offenders. Rice erred in a good cause, twice taking desperate chances under coaching advice to advance an extra base and both times being defeated at the cost of a run. Dixon was caught napping at second by a great throw from Catcher Gibson.

Aside from these lapses the Browns fulfilled all requirements and pleased not only George Sisler and the Boston critics by their work but baseball's High Commissioner, Kenesaw M. Landis, who occupied a box within easy range of third base and the photographers.

"Snappy team" commented the Judge as the Browns trotted off the field, "they look good and ought to be in the running."

Batting Eyes Found.

The Browns found their lost batting eyes today and rode the ball all over the lot, making 12 base hits and a lot of hard smashes that went to fielders. Manager Sisler, with three hits out of four tries led the way, and Harry Rice, with a triple and a single, was next best. Melillo did his share both at the bat and afield. Each glimpse of this little man makes the Browns' management better satisfied that it was not gold-bricked when it bought this lad for the equivalent of $60,000.

Most pleasing of all, to Manager Sisler, was the showing of Pitchers Zachary and Ballou. These hurlers came to the Browns for Joe Bush. Both came through today in a manner to prove that they will be factors for the St. Louis club.

Zachary opened for the Browns and for five innings he held the enemy at his mercy. With two down in the first Zachary allowed two indifferent singles to be scratched off his delivery but closed up for the third easy out. Thereafter the enemy got one hit in the third after two were down, one hit in the fourth with one down, and one hit to lead off with in the fifth session. In each case old Tom merely bore down a little harder and retired the side runless. The team and the critics are agreed that this pitcher is in great shape and will win more games for the Browns than did Joe Bush last year.

Ballou took up the defensive burden in the sixth and finished out the game. He yielded three hits and one run, the tally being due to a base on balls preceding Walsh's hard double, the only sound wallop made off Ballou. There was no time during his stay on the mound when Ballou's hooks and change of pace did not have the enemy under reasonable control.

Not Weak Pitching.

The Browns' hitting was not at the expense of the Boston team's leading hurlers. Nevertheless, both Smith and Kamp were members of last year's Braves, while Wertz has been mowing down the enemy in exhibition games here. Wertz, up to today's game, had allowed but one run in 12 innings, and was the sensation of the Cocoanut League, but the Browns knocked most of the sense out of the sensation. In the two closing chapters they walloped him for four hits and a run. And it would have been more had Harry Rice not been coached in from third on his triple.

Smith opened on the mound for Boston, and escaped until the third inning, when the Browns found the range. Gerber singled, to start this inning. Zachary sacrificed like a Johnny Tobin, and then Harry Rice smacked a single that scored Gerber. Gautreau of the Braves had the ball as Rice rounded first base, but Rice sped on toward second, a hopeless effort to make that station. He was an easy out.

Rough on Alfonse.

Alfonse Kamp was Boston's next mound offering, but the Browns refused to act the Gaston to Kamp's Alphonse. They smashed him around brutally. Coupled with a base on balls, a wild pitch and a hit batsman, due to Kamp's failure to control his southpaw crossfire, a hit by Sisler and then one by Durst in the clean-up position, scored a pair of tallies in the fourth. A base on balls and two singles in the fifth netted another run.

The final count of the game was made off Wertz when, with Ballou on base, Rice clouted one to deep center and tried to stretch it into a homer. He failed, and went out. Melillo's single right afterwards would have scored Rice.

The Braves have a real pennant bee buzzing around their camp. It has stung nearly all the correspondents badly. In the Cocoanut League this spring the Braves, up to today's game, had won six games, tied one and lost one, the Yanks gaining a 2-1 victory over a second string Boston nine.

Next game with the Dodgers at Clearwater, Monday. Falk or Davis and Jounard will probably work for the Browns.

Pitchers Elmer Austin, Walter Beck, Danny White and Walter Buckner, Catcher Porter and Third Baseman Shannon will not make the trip with the regulars.

QUARTER FINALS
Springfield 25, Marion 23.
Murphysboro 20, Central 15.
Mt. Vernon 29, Centralia 13.
Mt. Carmel 40, Beaumont 29.

Three Illinois High School basket ball teams and one from Missouri qualified for the semifinals in the Mississippi Valley tournament at the Washington University field house, as a result of victories in the quarterfinals last night.

St. Louis last hope for the championship fell by the wayside, when Central, undefeated champion of the Interscholastic League, was eliminated by Murphysboro, 20-15.

In addition to Murphysboro, the quintets still in the hunt for the championship from an entry of 43 fives are Mt. Vernon, which eliminated Centralia, last year's champion; Mt. Carmel and Springfield, Mo.

Springfield opposes Mt. Vernon and Mt. Carmel faces Murphysboro in the semifinals tomorrow afternoon. The title battle will be played at 8 o'clock tomorrow night, with the consolation conflict an hour earlier.

Central Off Form.

Central, in going down to defeat at the hands of the Murphysboro five, played one of its worst games of the season. In the first quarter, the quintet failed to score a single point, while the Illinois team counted 10. The Mid-City five braced in the second period and put over seven points, but was never able to overcome the early margin gained by Murphysboro.

Gayle proved the star for Central. In the last few minutes of the battle, Central did a lot of passing back and forth, but it helped little in the way of scoring points.

Champions Eliminated.

Mt. Vernon led all the way in defeating the Centralia quintet, which won the Washington University tournament last year. Mt. Vernon showed some of the best team work and passing seen during the competition, Moore and Ellis standing out as the stars of the evening. Moore is playing in his third Pikeway tournament.

Mt. Vernon's defense was very effective, Centralia getting few shots at the basket from close range and being so closely guarded that only three field goals were registered, one in the first half and two in the second.

The Mt. Carmel-Beaumont game was fairly even during the first half. Beaumont rallied and took a lead of 23 to 18 shortly after the second half started and then the Mt. Carmel quintet struck its stride and showed a brilliant attack, E. Kamp and Mundy displaying remarkable accuracy at caging the ball.

Marion was eliminated in the quarter-finals by Springfield, 25—22, only after a desperate struggle in the second half. Springfield ran up a 10-point lead in the first half, but fine playing by Pulley at center, who scored three field goals and two free throws, brought the score to 15-all. The count was again tied at 19—19 and 21—21. Here Stark and Latimer of Springfield counted field goals to clinch the game. Henley counted for Marion just as the contest ended. It was the closest battle of the tournament.

Hornsby Ready to Start His First Full Season as Pilot, Outlines Baseball Policies

Rogers Feels That He Has a Great Chance to Emerge Victorious in the Pennant Race—Players Will Have to Deliver or They Will Be on the Way to Minors.

By William J. McGoogan,
Of the Post-Dispatch Sport Staff.

SAN ANTONIO, Tex., March 20.—Rogers Hornsby, baseball's foremost slugger, is facing the greatest test of his career. He is preparing to lead the Cardinals into the National League pennant race, a race in which he believes he has an excellent chance to emerge victorious. Everything has been done to provide the material needed to make the club a championship factor. Pitchers have been added to the roster who, Hornsby thinks, will strengthen the staff. Each necessary move has been made to give the manager what he wanted, and it is now up to him to make good.

Nor is Hornsby shrinking from the task. He believes in his ball club. He likes the players and they admire him. Rogers has ideas as to how a ball club should be run and discusses them freely in a frank, straightforward way without any fondling of the chin or attempts to simulate profound thought.

"Here's my policy, as you call it, and it doesn't take long to say," declared the Cards' manager. "They do or they don't for me. If they do, all right. If they don't, we'll get somebody that does. You know I make good money out of the game, but I love baseball. And when you love a game you want to win. That's me. If I don't win a pennant in a year or two I'm through. I gotta put over a winner or I'll step down and let somebody else take a crack at the job.

No Pets on This Ball Club.

"One thing I want to make clear. There are no favorites on the club. I may like one fellow more than another, but that's the bunk on the ball field. If some egg that I think is dumber than four humpty dumpties can get out and sock in a run, or go in and steal second and score a winning run on a short single, wouldn't I be a square head to let my belief that he's dumb stand in the way of the team's success?

"Another thing—I have no detectives or snitches. I know without being told who is behaving himself on this club and I will also know if anybody begins to slip. Should that happen I will take steps to see that the backslider behaves. I'm not foolish enough to try to dictate the personal habits of the players, but a ball player owes it to the club, his employer, to deliver the goods and when a player's personal habits interfere with the delivery of satisfactory baseball goods he's either gotta shake his habits or we'll shake him out of the league. We won't interfere with anybody's liberty or pursuit of happiness, but if they won't play good baseball they can do their pursuing in the bush leagues."

While he was just a player, Hornsby was polite to interviewers but he never had anything to say that made much of an impression. He was a great player for years, a brilliant fielder and a terrific batter. But he was not colorful except that there is a certain color about long base hits that cannot be effaced. But just the same Rogers lacked color. There

Richards Beats Bill Tilden in Five-Set Match

No. 3 Ranking Player Wins Southeastern Title in Sensational Battle.

By the Associated Press.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., March 20.—William Tilden II, National champion, lost another tennis title here this afternoon when he went down to defeat before the brilliant volleying and steady chopping of Vincent Richards, New York, America's No. 3 player, in five bitterly fought sets, 6—8, 14—12, 4—6, 6—0, 6—4, while defending his title in the singles final of the Southeastern Tennis Tournament.

Richards at the top of his form, earned his victory, matching the champion's drives with his chop stroke. The match consisted largely of a base line duel, with Tilden driving steadily and Richards returning accurately for long rallies.

Tilden weakened visibly in the fourth set and after Richards run up a four-love lead, tossed away the remaining two games rather than attempt to overcome it.

Both Tilden and Richards slammed over first service balls for many aces. Neither resorted to lobbing except when forced to the stroke on tries for difficult shots. Both were deadly with their overhead.

In a tense moment in the last set Richards turned quickly to reach a drive and fell, scraping open the elbow on his playing arm. Tilden gave him a chance to recover and continue the rally by putting up a high lob. In the same set, with Richards leading 5—4, Tilden leaped high in the air after a lob, came down heavily and stopped to remove his garters. He limped to position to receive service, stamped his foot and continued.

MEYER ESTABLISHES NEW HURDLE RECORD

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y., March 20.—Herbert Meyer of the Newark A. C. and former Rutgers captain, raced to a new world's record in the 60-yard low hurdles race on Alexander Field today in Union College's first annual invitation meet.

Disqualified in the first two races of the hurdles series, Meyer negotiated the 60-yard event in seven and one-tenth seconds, three-tenths of a second faster than the former record. Carl Christierson of the Newark A. C. won the series.

Montgomery, Who Meets Kealey Here, Owns Victory Over Risko

Conqueror of Jack Adams Defeated Risko in His Home Town Last Year — Neither Sully Nor Kealey Has Been Knocked Out.

The knockout of Jack Adams, former Scott Field soldier, by Sully Montgomery in a Chicago ring Friday night, is regarded as a stroke of good fortune by Matchmaker Gene Straus of the New Coliseum A. C. Adams had been scheduled to meet K. O. Eddie Kealey of Bridgeport, Conn., in one of four all-star bouts Monday night at the Coliseum, but it was generally feared that he would prove no match for Kealey.

The sudden reverse suffered by the Sergeant at Chicago forced Straus to change his program and he was fortunate enough to get Montgomery to take Adams' place against Kealey.

This substitution changes the complexion of the bout and of the entire program. Montgomery, a former Center College football player, is reputed to have a knockout wallop comparable with that of any heavyweight in the game with the exception of the champion himself. He has been boxing professionally since 1920. His record is generously sprinkled with knockout victories but he has lost several bouts on fouls.

Outpointed Johnny Risko.

Montgomery's finest achievement, except for the numerous knockouts against second raters, was a point victory over Johnny Risko in Cleveland early last year. Risko on Friday evening last sailed into Paul Berlenbach, the sensational bone-crusher," and hammered him about the ring in Madison Square Garden for a decisive victory.

Few boxers boast victories over Risko, who has, on the other hand, amassed a long string of conquests, and is now heralded a championship contender.

The meeting of Kealey and Montgomery should be productive of heavy hitting, with little probability that the event will last the full 10 rounds. Kealey proved his punching ability when he knocked out Buck Brady in his first bout in St. Louis, a few weeks ago.

Perfetti Meets Kaiser.

The fast action of the evening's entertainment is expected from the clash between the clever bantams, Johnny Kaiser and Lew Perfetti. Kaiser, once the idol of all St. Louis boxing fans, is working hard to re-establish himself. In his most recent bout here, he defeated Morris King at the Coliseum. On that occasion he made a very pleasing showing with his clean boxing and hard hitting. He realizes that in order to beat Perfetti, one of the most skillful flyweights in the game, he will have to hit harder than his opponent. Perfetti in two previous appearances here won from Mike Sansone and Jimmy Russo.

Babe McCorgary will face Henry Malcor in one of the four 10-round bouts on the program. Nothing but fierce, slashing milling can result from the meeting of this pair of fast punchers.

In the opener, two Negroes, Benny Hall and Indian Joe will entertain.

INDUSTRIAL BOWLING EVENT NEXT MONTH

The State industrial bowling tournament will be held at the Rogers Recreation alleys starting April 17. The tournament, sanctioned by the Chamber of Commerce, will be for teams from the different industrial concerns of this city and within a radius of 150 miles. The tournament will be for five-man, two-man and individuals and will be divided into two classes. Entry blanks are now being distributed. The entry fee is $1 a man.

The St. Louis Industrial Bowling Association has the following officers and directors: E. E. Grubb, president; William Frisch, first vice president; H. W. Bergmann, second vice president; Wooster Lambert, third vice president; F. B. Flower, treasurer; A. F. Berne, secretary; E. N. Howard, tournament manager. Directors: F. Brett, C. Nord, M. Lammert, D. M. Houghtlin, W. A. Meister, Charles Dombach, George Kerr, J. Ostermueller, Charles Minnich, Thomas P. Carroll, M. A. Cochran, Matt Kohring Jr.

Witters Increase Lead.

The Witter Razz team, leader in the Major City Bowling League, put over a three-game victory over the Greenfields in the last round. This enabled the five to increase its margin to six games. The second place Drink Whistles dropped one game to the Dolly Vardens, while the Schaefer Recreations took the full set from the Cabannes. The Washington five won the odd game from the Champion Score Books. The Sebastians took two out of three from the Rick-Chaplines, while the Congress five dropped two odd to the David Jones.

Jason Skinner carried off the individual three-game honors with a total of 673, while G. Schirr had 258 for high single.

Burtt and Heibert Win.

Cliff Burtt and Syl Heibert won championship in the Schaefer Delmar Recreation two-man tournament at Schaefers. Bolin and Kuhnert tied with Hermann and Flesh for second place.

Schaefer is receiving entries for a duck pin league, which will open the season April 10.

Mathews One of Best Coaches in Country, Dr. Edmunds Asserts

R. L. MATHEWS, University of Idaho coach who is being sought by St. Louis University, is one of the best coaches in the country and ranks highly on the Pacific Coast, according to Dr. W. P. Edmunds, athletic director at Washington University.

When Washington went into the market for a mentor after the 1924 season, Mathews was the first one the authorities considered. His record was thoroughly scrutinized and found to be entirely satisfactory but other arrangements at the time prevented his selection.

"He has coached small college teams that stood toe to toe with big universities," said Dr. Edmunds, "and ought to give St. Louis U. its best teams. He is one of the outstanding coaches today."

letic director instead of merely coaching, as has already been announced. The building of the new gymnasium, which will be ready next Fall, has revived interest in a number of athletic pursuits which have never flourished because of lack of facilities and it will be the athletic director's work to supervise these sports, with assistants coaching them. The student newspaper is even clamoring for a crew but the new swimming pool will hardly accommodate more than a tank squad.

Greater per capita participation among the students in sports will be the keynote of the new program. Handball alleys, bowling alleys and indoor track, various gymnastic contrivances and two basketball courts will help accomodate the demand for physical development.

Mathews' Record.

Coach Mathews is a graduate of Notre Dame University. He played both backfield and line positions on the football squad, about 15 years ago, antedating the Rockne-Dorais combination about a year.

He has coached the Idaho team for four years and, considering the small enrollment of the school, has been successful. He is credited with developing excellent forward passing combinations.

The record of Idaho for the past four years is as follows:

TWO GOOD YOUNGS

If Bolen and Falk We Come Through It Woul Best Staff in Baseb

By John E. Wray,

TARPON SPRINGS, Fla., 20.—In a baseball world devoid of good left-hand p the Browns' hurling staff stands out like a lighthous storm.

Several rival clubs have n left-hander of proven merit may count on the fingers o hand, left-hand hurlers wh any considerable success last But the Browns are going battle front with at least fo probably five southpaws, th whom have proved their wo one or more years in the leagues and two of whom time appear extremely pro prospects.

Observe the list:

Joe Giard, whose record the Browns last year was o the encouraging features o season.

J. T. Zachary, last year Washington, a veteran of se seasons, but who is still on years old.

Ernie Wingard, three y with the Browns and a ha quantity.

Stewart Bolen, one of Browns' brightest prospects though not yet of age.

Chester Falk, last season the Browns but not then enough to take a regular tur the hill.

If only the first three pit he considered the Browns left staff must still be ranked as midable. Giard with his league experience of last yea hind him is expected to su the record of 10 victories and defeats which he achieved in Giard is ironing out several in his delivery that may fu increase his effectiveness.

Zachary Due for a Good Ye

Zachary seems to be in wo ful condition at this time. His pitching effort showed him well advanced and there trace now of the soreness of that at times in past seasons h capped his performances. rugged, red-faced, good na six-footer appears set for one good years. Last season was a one for Zachary, but not de age. He is still on the safe si 30 and has years of good he left in him, apparently. With Washington club last season record was not as good as th Joe Bush, for whom, with Ba Zachary was traded. Bush wo and lost 15 games. Zachary wo and lost 15. With his arm in s and with the better punch of Browns to help out it seems to figure Zachary out of the ink and on the plus side of won-and-lost percentage.

Wingard, sick last year, was slow par. No fear is entertained that the lanky Alabaman will to regain the form he display couple of years ago. Despite illness and the bad start of Browns last year Wingard was tually a 50-50 pitcher. He o to win from 14 to 20 games the Browns this year.

Bolen Just a Youngster.

Bolen, the youngster, was the Browns' farm at Tulsa year. He won 17 games and lo for that club and was only 19 y old. He brought several bad de ery faults to the spring trai camp here but these are b ironed out by constant work. B will get plenty of chance this sp to prove himself, for Sisler Scout Cahill think well of youngster.

As for Falk, that lanky unkn quantity, has all the stuff in world if he can apply himself industriously work out his fi He showed in practice games far enough stuff to warrant leg that he can come through be a real winner by hard wor

Last year four of the Brow left-handers won 48 games for t respective clubs. If they do better than that in 1926 and right-handers of the team can d well the Browns will about h the pennant clinched with a rentage of .592.

As a matter of fact from present outlook if the lefthan fail to win 50 games for the Sisler will have a right to sadly disappointed.

Bolen is a fine prospect "he today." He hasnh own me a lot ready and has not even called to play his best asset, his knuc ball. Falk has a lot of stuff. I not ready to pronounce on him yet.

"I expect the teams that f left-handers will have real trou with my club this year."

If the right-handers, not l since the mainstay of the Brow can hold their own with the le handers, Sisler's pennant hopes will travel far toward the cha pionship. And surely Gaston, Je nard, Robertson, Vangilder, Da Dallon and Nevers ought to be al to contribute their share of rig hand victories.

Giard, Wingard And Zachary are Considered Aces

Manager Says Each of Trio Ought to Win More Than Half of Games Pitched.

TWO GOOD YOUNGSTERS

If Bolen and Falk Were to Come Through It Would Be Best Staff in Baseball.

By John E. Wray.

Sports Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

TARPON SPRINGS, Fla., March 20.—In a baseball world almost devoid of good left-hand pitchers the Browns' hurling staff today stands out like a lighthouse in a storm.

Several rival clubs have not one left-hander of proven merit. One may count on the fingers of one hand, left-hand hurlers who had any considerable success last year. But the Browns are going to the battle front with at least four and probably five southpaws, three of whom have proved their worth by one or more years in the major leagues and two of whom at this time appear extremely promising prospects.

Observe the list:

Joe Giard, whose record with the Browns last year was one of the encouraging features of the season.

J. T. Zachary, last year with Washington, a veteran of several seasons, but who is still only 29 years old.

Ernie Wingard, three years with the Browns and a known quantity.

Stewart Bolen, one of the Browns' brightest prospects, although not yet of age.

Chester Falk, last season with the Browns but not then ripe enough to take a regular turn on the hill.

If only the first three pitchers be considered the Browns left-hand staff must still be ranked as formidable. Giard with his major league experience of last year behind him is expected to surpass the record of 10 victories and five defeats which he achieved in 1925. Giard is ironing out several kinks in his delivery that may further increase his effectiveness.

Zachary Due for a Good Year.

Zachary seems to be in wonderful condition at this time. His first pitching effort showed him to be well advanced and there is no trace now of the soreness of arm that at times in past seasons handicapped his performances. The rugged, red-faced, good natured six-footer appears set for one of his good years. Last season was an off one for Zachary, but not due to age. He is still on the safe side of 30 and has years of good heaving left in him, apparently. With the Washington club last season his record was not as good as that of Joe Bush, for whom, with Ballou, Zachary was traded. Bush won 15 and lost 15 games. Zachary won 12 and lost 15. With his arm in shape and with the better punch of the Browns to help out, it seems safe to figure Zachary out of the red ink and on the plus side of the won-and-lost percentage.

Wingard, sick last year, was below par. No fear is entertained that the lanky Alabaman will fail to regain the form he displayed a couple of years ago. Despite his illness and the bad start of the Browns last year Wingard was virtually a 50-50 pitcher. He ought to win from 16 to 20 games for the Browns this year.

Bolen Just a Youngster.

Bolen, the youngster, was with the Browns' farm at Tulsa last year. He won 17 games and lost 13 for that club and was only 19 years old. He brought several bad delivery faults to the spring training camp here but these are being ironed out by constant work. Bolen will get plenty of chance this spring to prove himself, for Sisler and Scout Cahill think well of the youngster.

As for Falk, that lanky unknown quantity, has all the stuff in the world if he can apply himself and industriously work out his fate. He showed in practice games thus far enough stuff to warrant belief that he can come through and be a real winner by hard work.

Last year four of the Brownie left-handers won 48 games for their respective clubs. If they do no better than that in 1926 and the right-handers of the team can do as well the Browns will about have the pennant clinched with a percentage of .592.

As a matter of fact from the present outlook if the lefthanders fail to win 50 games for the club Sisler will have a right to feel sadly disappointed.

Bolen is a fine prospect "he said today." He hassh own me a lot already and has not even called into play his best asset, his knuckle ball. Falk has a lot of stuff. I am not ready to pronounce on him as yet.

"I expect the teams that feat left-handers will have real trouble with my club this year."

If the right-handers, not long since the mainstay of the Browns, can hold their own with the left-handers, Sisler's pennant hopefuls will travel far toward the championship. And surely Gaston, Jonnard, Robertson, Vangilder, Davis, Dallon and Nevers ought to be able to contribute their share of right-hand victories.

By the Associated Press.

CANNES, France, March 20.—Miss Helen Wills, the American woman tennis champion, will probably bring her Riviera tennis to a close tomorrow with the match in the final of the singles against Joan Ridley, the young English star, whom Miss Wills defeated at Nice.

Miss Wills today reached the final by defeating Eileen Bennett, another English girl, 6—2, 6—4. She has not entered for the Beau Site tournament, to be held here, and she said today she plans to leave either for Italy or Paris, early next week.

"I would like to have some practice at Paris," she added, "provided the weather there is favorable. Perhaps I shall go to Italy in a few days, but I may change my mind and remain here for another week."

Miss Wills and Henri Cochet scored a victory today over Joan Ridley and Mr. Scovel, in the semi-finals of the mixed doubles. The second set was a particularly trying one, the score of the match being 6—1, 9—7.

Tomorrow, paired with M. Cochet, she will meet Jean Rudcliffe and Benny Meyer in the final.

Decreasing Angle of Pole and Take-Off Board Limit the Pole Vault to 14 Feet, 6 Inches

Arthur W. Lambert Former Missouri Valley Champion Tells Why Greater Height Is a Physical Impossibility— Perfect Form and Physique Essential to Success.

By Arthur W. Lambert,
(Missouri Valley Conference Pole Vault Champion 1910, 1911, 1912.)

SEVERAL years ago the sporting world was astounded to hear that a Norwegian athlete was pole vaulting to astounding heights of over 13 feet. The news was generally taken with the proverbial grain of salt, and when Charles Hoff failed to start with the bamboo rod at the Olympic Games several months thereafter his claims were greatly discounted.

Hoff's performances were so far superior to anything on record that many believed he employed clever tricks or mysterious methods in violation of the accepted rules for the event.

Most Difficult of Mastery.

Pole vaulting is the most difficult event on the entire field athletics calendar to master. It requires perfect physical condition to a degree not necessary in other events. A one-armed man can run and we have seen a lame giant give a healthy heave to a 16-pound shot. But a pole vaulter must be physically perfect to even get to "first base." Then comes the necessity for form. An aspirant for honors in this event must master form, form and more form. This usually scares away good material. Men who have speed follow the course of least resistance and specialize in running events. Big men are usually too heavy and clumsy. Therefore, as a rule, the great number of aspirants for pole vault honors come from the ranks of those who have been endowed with little speed and low weight propelling power. A first-class runner or a good shot man seldom takes to the bamboo pole.

In Charles Hoff we have an athlete of first-class sprinting quality. He is also tall and slender in build. He is a tall man without clumsiness. He has mastered the technique of proper vaulting form. Hoff will do 14 feet simply because he is built for it. And I venture to say there are American athletes who will soon follow him. But to do 14 feet a man must be tall, over six feet two in stature, gracefully proportioned, catlike in action, a master of vaulting technique and a fast sprinter. He should have a high center of gravity, or long legs with a short body.

Limit to Length of Pole.

Fourteen feet six inches I look on as about the limit under present rules, because higher vaults require a longer grasp on the pole and when the limit of pole length has been reached the angle of the pole with the ground at the instant of impact is so narrow that instead of the vaulter going up he merely bounces backward.

If a seven-foot athlete could qualify as a finished vaulter 15 feet might be reached, but such giants are usually clumsy or weak physically in proportion to their size. Outdoor records are higher than indoor because the vaulter plants his pole in a hole to take off, thus getting a more favorable angle at the jump. Recently, indoor vaulting has shown a tendency to use a raised track with a similar hole to plant the pole in. This also acts in favor of the vaulter.

Charles Hoff is no superhuman athlete. He is merely a fast, graceful, six-footer who is performing in proportion to the little fellows like Coyle and Nelson, his predecessors.

From 10 Feet to 14 Feet.

A quarter of a century ago important vaulting events were won at eight or nine feet, and a 10-foot performance was considered spectacular. Then came a change in the method of grasping the pole. Someone invented a shift whereby the lower hand at the instant of planting the pole was shifted up to the position of the upper hand. This change in form resulted in vaults to heights in excess of 11 feet. The two hands acting as a sort of fulcrum about which the body could be lifted with a swinging or pendulous rise enabled the vaulter to clear heights a foot or more higher than his grasp on the pole. With this shift as perfected and used to great advantage by such vaulters as Arthur Dole and Leroy Samse the 12-foot mark was cleared and pole-vaulting became an event requiring infinite attention to proper form.

Hoff's Height and Weight Have Much to Do With His Success

CHARLES HOFF is particularly fitted for those branches of athletics in which he excels. He is big physically without being bulky. He is 6 feet ½ inch in height and he weighs only 152 pounds.

He develops unusual speed in sprint events, his time for the 100 meters being 10 4-5 seconds. This speed aids him in obtaining his cat-like spring from the take-off, enabling him to reach unprecedented heights in the pole vault and to equal the world's indoor broad jump record.

Hoff Smashes Vault Record For 10th Time

Norwegian Clears Bar at 13 Feet 7½ Inches in East.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, March 20.—Charles Hoff, exceeded the world's pole vault record for the tenth time tonight in the Postoffice Clerks' games in the 102d Engineers Armory when he cleared the bar at 13 feet 7½ inches.

He arched his body fully six inches over the cross piece at the new height. The new mark was ½ an inch above Hoff's last world's record.

Hoff negotiated the dizzy height on his first attempt, soaring more than a foot higher than the second man, Victor Pickard of the University of Pittsburg, who vaulted 12 feet, 6 inches. Emerson Norton of Gorgetown University placed third with a vault of 12 feet.

Members of the Norwegian diplomatic corps of Washington, D. C. saw the record breaking feat.

Hubbard Sets Record.

After establishing his new pole vault record Hoff watched DeHart Hubbard, Negro, former Michigan athlete, shatter the world's indoor broad jump mark with a leap of 24 feet, 7½ inches. The former record of 23 feet, 7¾ inches was made by Hoff in the all-round competition Tuesday night in the Knights of Columbus games at Madison Square Garden.

Hubbard, who also holds the world's outdoor record for the event broke the record on his first try. On his second jump he leaped 24 feet, 4¼ inches.

MISS ELIZABETH RYAN WINS NATIONAL INDOOR TENNIS TITLE

Triumphs After Losing First Set To Mrs. Jessup

Defending Champion Romps Through First Set of Championship Match, 6—1.

By the Associated Press.

BROOKLINE, Mass., March 20.—New national indoor tennis champions were crowned in women's singles and doubles and mixed doubles this afternoon in the final round matches of the 19th annual tournament at the Chestnut Hill covered courts.

Miss Elizabeth Ryan, of Santa Monica, Cal., came from behind to catch and overcome Mrs. John B. Jessup, of Wilmington, Del., in a brilliant three-set match scored at 1—6, 6—2, 6—3. Mrs. Jessup had held the singles title for two successive years, while it was Miss Ryan's first attempt to win the indoor championship.

Also Wins in Doubles.

Miss Ryan later helped Miss Mary K. Browne of New York, win the women's doubles championship by beating Mrs. Jessup and Mrs. George W. Wightman of Boston, 6—1, 6—3. That match saw on the same court, three of the four members of the American Wightman Cup team, as well as the donor of the famous international trophy of the courts.

In the mixed doubles Mrs. Wightman teamed up successfully with George Peabody Gardner Jr., president of the Longwood Cricket Club and in his younger days a four letter athlete at Harvard, against Mrs. Charles J. Hubbard of Boston, and Arnold W. Jones, of Providence, a former Yale tennis captain. The scores were 6—3, 6—3.

In the singles final, Mrs. Jessup started brilliantly and her superior speed and accuracy gave her the set with a margin of 25 to 15 in points. At the outset of the second set, Miss Ryan began forcing the play, her service became steadier and occasional rushes to the net enabled her to check her rival's brilliant game and thereafter Mrs. Jessup was given few opportunities to regain her early advantage.

Mrs. Jessup Fatigued.

Mrs. Jessup obviously was fatigued from her efforts in the singles and was far below her normal game in the women's doubles final that followed. Mrs. Wightman threw up a stream of lobs that prevented the superior teamwork and harder hitting of Misses Ryan and Browne, from making it a complete walkaway.

In the mixed doubles Mrs. Wightman once more was the dominating figure. Her lobs, kept always close to the opposite base line, were sufficient to keep Mrs. Hubbard and Jones from the net, but when the former Yale athlete did succeed in gaining a position in fore court, his terrific overhead shots generally were good for clean aces. Jones' powerful and accurate service was a big factor in helping his side to make the match close, but his partner was too weak at the net to press Mrs. Wightman and Gardner.

The Tale of a Bat

By JOHN E. WRAY

COMING of a nutty family, of course I had to wind up in baseball. My ancestral tree was related to the Hickory's and naturally I was a pretty tough young limb, when the timber man spotted us. Shortly afterwards they moved a sawmill into the neighborhood, and the family was all cut up about it.

As for myself, they trimmed me to a whisper. I didn't have any more bark left than a Chihuahua dog. I was just one of a big batch of four-by-fours, cut in four-foot lengths. Some dude had stuck a couple of harpoons into the ends of me and the next thing I remember I was on a lathe, spinning around like a shore-leave sailor after his second quart of moonshine.

There was a guy standing over me with a chisel and I could see my finish. Just before they gave me the anesthetic I heard him say to his mate:

"This is gonna be some war club. It's for the world's greatest hitter, George Hornsler, and you'll hear some more about it, I bet you."

And then he dug into me with that steel and I passed out. The next thing I remember is waking up, feeling pretty slick. I was with a lot of other cross-grained guys of the hickory and ash tribes. And say, we were a funny looking lot, all slick and smooth and round. And, if I do say it, we were about the shapeliest looking things to be seen outside of a Follies Chorus.

Then another guy picks me up and gives me a swing.

"That's a peach," he said to his pal. "Weighs 44 ounces, handle just right. That grain is almost perfect. I bet this wagon tongue will punish some pitchers before it finishes up."

Then they treated me to more misery by branding an "official" label on me, after which I was painted all over with sticky, smelly stuff they said was varnish. Next, I was packed away with 11 other bats and jostled off to the man who bought us. And then the fun began.

I felt all dolled up in my new varnish and was a bit stuck up about it. But they took that off quick.

"Here, Jimmy, fix up this bat for me," my new owner shouted. Jimmy was the club house czar and what he did to me is almost too horrible to tell.

First he took a piece of glass and scraped off all my beautiful varnish. Often, since, I have wondered why they varnish bats at all, since it is always scraped off before the club is used. As he scraped Jimmy from time to time squirted tobacco juice over me and kept rubbing it in. The more tobacco, the more basehits was Jimmy's theory of dressing down a bat. When he finished, instead of a nice, clean, Mongolian complexion, I became a dirty brown with no shine on me at all.

Jimmy put some tape around my handle and then put me in a locker labled "George Hornsler," the guy who signed me on. From that time I had my inning. Hornsler, my boss, took a liking to me and paraded me on all important occasions. He had two sets of us bats, one lighter and shorter than those of my model. He used us for different purposes but when he wanted something done up brown, he sent for me.

And say, I delivered the goods. In the pinch me and George were sure there. It got so that everyone wanted to try out Hornsler's bat. Once one of the team sneaked me off the pile and took a turn at bat with me. Hornsler found it out and what happened after the game in the clubhouse you can find out from "Doc" Brammel who dressed the other fellow's wounds.

"I won't have any of these hams busting you up," George told me on the quiet, afterwards. I didn't get what he meant until one day I saw them bring in the pieces of one of George's lighter clubs, which had been broken by a pitcher who had borrowed it.

"That's what I get for letting a pitcher hit with my bat," Hornsler complained. "Most pitchers don't know enough about batting to hold the club with the label side up."

I didn't get that, either, until one of the veteran war clubs spoke up and says: "It goes against my grain to be hit with the label held sideways."

It sure went against mine, a few days later, when one of the team, in a hurry, grabbled Hornsler's lucky club—myself—and hit with the label pointing toward the dugout. He knocked a little sliver off of me, about half an inch wide and six inches long, tapering down to a point. I was all broken up about it. I thought I would turn out a "has-been" and could see myself finishing with the fungo brigade.

But it didn't end me. That clubhouse pest, Jimmy, came to the rescue.

"It's only a little splinter, George. I can fix it up so that it will be sound again.

So he glued me back and then tacked me in place with several phonograph needles—a lot of them, in fact.

To tell the truth, I was as good as new. Hornsler started knocking the ball for doubles and triples. When he had finished the season he led all the rest. And the next year he kept going again. For every extra-base hit, he drove another phonograph needle into me. He put them in rows all around me until, after a couple of years, there were enough needles in the business end of me to stock a 10-cent store.

But one day Hornsler was at bat. Eddie Collins was on second base and that bird has some eyes. Something about me attracted his notice. He called the umpire's attention to me and demanded an inspection. And there I was, all loaded up with harmony. The ump took one look and then ruled me out of the game. I was through broadcasting triples and home runs for the rest of my life.

"Artificially weighted—against the rules. You'll have to throw it out, George," the umpire commanded.

And that's why I'm not now helping win a championship. Every now and then, when the boss isn't getting his safe hits as regular as he did, he'll take me out of the locker and whistle me through the air.

"We'd show 'em something if they would only let me use you, eh kid?"

That sure makes me feel good. And it isn't the needles in me that make me feel all stuck up, either.

Muny Elevens Play Semifinal Contests Today

Double-Header Scheduled for Fairground; Paulians and Smiths Favored.

Semifinal games in the municipal soccer elimination race will be played this afternoon at Fairground on field No. 2, starting at 1:15 o'clock. Paulian Council opens against Grand and Kossuth and at 3:15 the Fairmount Democratic Club meets the Smiths.

The winners of today's contests will play a three-game series, starting next Sunday, to decide the championship.

Prospective fair weather adds to the interest of today's attractions. Last week the grounds were too soggy and slippery to admit of high-class football and, as a result, the light, fast squads were greatly hampered.

Paulian Council and the Smiths are favored to come through today's round safely, but the odds are not long. The Smiths are the only "seeded" team left in competition, the Paulians having eliminated the other "seeded" squad, the Highlands, in the first round.

Fairmounts Experienced.

The Fairmount Democrats have a well-experienced group of players and may cause the Smiths considerable trouble. Paulian Council should have a somewhat easier task with the Grand and Kossuth eleven. The Paulians are young and fast and on a hard field are hard to beat.

Today's lineups:

WICHITA FIVE IN SEMIFINAL ROUND OF CATHOLIC TOURNEY

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, March 20. — Cathedral High School of Wichita, Kan., will meet Aquinas High School of Rochester, N. Y., tomorrow afternoon in the upper bracket in the semifinals of the National Catholic preparatory basketball title.

The Wichita team reached the semifinals with a 27 to 13 victory over Rockhurst Academy of Kansas City, Mo., and the Rochester team advanced by winning a tight game from Spalding Institute of Peoria, Ill., 18 to 17. Spalding had eliminated yesterday the St. Mel team of Chicago, 1925 champions.

Kennedy starred for the Aquinas aggregation in its victory over Spalding, scoring nine points and making the basket and free throw which gave his team the victory after a 15-all tie at the third quarter and a 22-all tie at the half.

Millers Brush Up for Western Soccer Cup Final

Meet the Speedy Wellston Club Today—Vespers Face Raticans.

In their last test before engaging in the Western final of the United States Football Association cup competition, the Ben Millers will oppose the Wellstons in the feature game of this afternoon's double-header at St. Louis U. Field, Grand boulevard and Laclede avenue.

Harry Ratican's youngsters will take another try at stopping the Vespers. Strangely, the Raticans have enjoyed more than a fair share of success against the Vespers.

Frank Vaughn will probably play center half for the Millers today in place of Peterson, who needs rest for his injured knee. Erbe and Daley will continue at fullback. If Jack O'Reilly, the Wellstons' new forward star, can be prevailed to postpone his departure for Asheville, S. C., he will appear at inside right for Brady's team. O'Reilly will start his professional baseball career at third base for the Asheville club.

Tal Mulroy, who has been out of the game with a bad ankle, will return to outside left for the Millers.

Winton E. Barker, president of the St. Louis Soccer League, announced yesterday that Dave Evans of Detroit has been appointed referee of the Western final between the Millers and the Chicago survivor, to be played here next Sunday. T. W. Cahill, secretary of the American Soccer League, and Andrew Brown, secretary of the U. S. F. A., will reach St. Louis Wednesday to assist in handling the Western final.

Bass Fishing.

YEARS ago the Gasconade River was one of our very best and splendid catches could be made all the way from Jerome to the mouth, but as the fish became scarcer, owing to many causes, the fly fishermen sought other and smaller streams and left the Gasconade to "trot liners" and pole and line fishermen.

Some three or four years ago, when many of our streams became quite shallow, owing to a long drouth, disciples of fly and casting rod drifted back to the good old Gasconade and were surprised by the number of bass taken, and returned home quite enthusiastic about it.

There are many good holes in this river and good sites for camping may be found all the way down.

The Meramec above St. Clair will give you a good day's sport, almost any time that the water is in fair condition.

The Bourboise River near Morse's Mill will afford good fishing as soon as it clears. This stream is not as well known as many others and is fished very little, because it is seldom in perfect condition, as it flows through so much rich and loose soil, which keeps the water muddy and milky a great deal of the time.

When right the Bourboise is one of our best bass streams, and is noted for the many big fellows taken.

If you enjoy catching frogs by flash light, try a night on the Bourboise. You can soon fill your basket.

If you start for the Bourboise and find the water in bad condition, it's not far to get back on the Meramec, so your trip need not be spoiled.

A Place to Fish.

A few days ago we had a delightful visit from Mr. S. H. Van Arsdale, an old friend of the writer's, of West Plains, Mo.

Mr. Van, incidentally, owns and manages the Arcade Hotel, but if you should drop in on him with a rod and tackle it won't be much of a job to persuade him to "go a-fishin'." And you won't find many who are as enthusiastic about fly fishing, nor many who know more about the game.

If anyone who really cares for fishing can spare 10 days he will have no better sport anywhere than in this section of the Ozarks, for there are a great many streams close by and one can choose between trout and small-mouth bass traveling over good roads.

The famous Greer Spring is only 30 miles away; North Fork of the White can be reached in 40 minutes, the same distance to Eleven Point River, into which Greer Spring empties.

Spring River can be reached in and hour and all of these streams afford splendid fishing. Furthermore this section is not overrun by a crowd, for there are not many who know very much about this part of the country.

If you contemplate a trip to West Plains we suggest you write to Mr. Van Arsdale (mentioning the writer's name) and he will give you full information regarding the condition of the water, what lures the fish are taking, etc. And he will either go with you or give you the proper directions for finding the best spots. If you go by motor take Route 14 to Rolla, then Route 7 to West Plains.

While it is a bit early for bass to rise to the fly, Mr. Van has already taken some nice ones with fly and spinner.

Mr. Francis Adams and Mr. Martin Brennan had a very successful trip to Bennetts, had no trouble in taking the limit each day. The trout were taking the Ashton caterpillar, both gray and brown.

It is reported that Mrs. Smith expects to open up the hotel which is situated in the State Park, about half-way down the spring branch. This will be very convenient for the anglers, and will save going back to Lebanon each night.

Our friends from Canada have frequently told us about a small fish they use for trout bait, called it cock-a-touche. We have just learned that this is the same as the muckle head, which is found in most of our trout streams. Next time you go trout fishing and find the water too murky for fly, try a mucklehead instead of the ordinary minnow. You may land a big one.

As far as we know, Paydown has not been visited this year by any of our local men, but several are getting ready to go as soon as the weather settles a bit, and we hope to have some information about this stream by next Sunday.

FOUR MAJOR RULES FOR FOOTBALL CHANGED BY COMMITTEE

Penalty Is Provided to Curb Passing

Five Yards to Be Assessed for Failure to Complete Hurl After First Attempt.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, March 20.—Four major changes, affecting the forward pass, the safety, the ground rules, and the kickoff or free kick, were made in the football code by the football rules committee today.

Hereafter no team can throw more than one incompleted pass in the same series of downs without suffering a five-yard penalty.

The single pass allowed without penalty will be permitted on the first down only. This was the most drastic of the rule changes effected.

The next more important change was made in the safety rule. Hereafter, the ball will be put in play on the 20-yard line, instead of the 10-yard line, but only as a kick. The team in possession of the ball will be given the option of punting, drop kicking or place kicking the ball with the opposing team "restrained" at a distance of 10 yards.

About Ground Rules.

The new rule automatically makes th's play an on side kick, making it necessary for the defending side to catch or recover the ball before a player on the kicking side reaches it.

The change in the ground rules declares any ball "dead" that passes beyond the limits of the playing field, where heretofore this held true only in the case of a ball going into the stands or beyond the fence separating the field from the stands. A fumbled ball over the line, marking the 10-yard zone, or beyond the side lines, belongs to the side whose player last touched the ball within the limits of the playing field.

If a blocked kick rolls outside, the ball goes to the blocking side while a fumble that is touched last in the playing field simultaneously by opposing players goes to the team that did not put the ball in play.

Punts or passes out of bounds belong automatically to the team that did not put the ball in play.

On a kickoff or a free kick, it was decided that no player who steps out of bounds during the play will be eligible to recover the ball.

Europe's Economic Union Plan Is Sound and U. S. Should Help It, Robert S. Brookings Writes

Collective Tariff Arrangements Will Develop Industrial Nations and Improve World Conditions Generally, He Believes.

Just as the recent Locarno conference was a meeting of statesmen to settle political differences among nations, so two conferences to be held abroad next October will be efforts to smooth out economic questions which now perturb Europe and often react on business in the United States.

Robert S. Brookings of St. Louis and Washington, president of the Institute of Economics, has recently returned from visits to Italy, Germany, France and Great Britain for the purpose of securing information regarding the problems to be discussed.

The first of these conferences, the Pan-European, meets in Vienna Oct. 8. Later in the month there will be the League of Nations Conference, as provided in the Locarno pact.

An article written by Mr. Brookings, giving his observations and conclusions after his return from Europe, follows:

By ROBERT S. BROOKINGS.

President Institute of Economics and Institute for Government Research, Founder of the Brookings Graduate School of Economics at Washington University, and Author of "Industrial Ownership."

THE most important feature of the Locarno Pact, in my opinion, is the proposal for an economic conference of nations to be held in October, 1926. It indicates that the European nations composing the league appreciate the necessity, if not of a wide-reaching economic entente, at least of the removal of many artificial barriers that now impede economic intercourse. These barriers are the result, in great measure, of a distorted spirit of nationalism that had dominated the policy and practice of most European nations.

Since the Locarno meeting, a Pan-European Economic Conference has been called for Oct. 4, to be held at Vienna. This is a non-political conference to be attended by committees of representative men from nations on both sides of the water.

The doctrine of nationalism developed in the nineteenth century along unfortunate lines. It came to include, along with beneficent traits which we honor as patriotism, other traits often not only selfish but also destructive. It bred a feeling that the welfare of one nation depended not only on the fullest development of its own resources but also on weakening the opportunities for development in other nations.

American Tradition.

In this country it was well enough for Henry Clay and Daniel Webster to advocate an "American System" which should promote our economic independence. They were driven into a more intense nationalism by the depredations at the hands of France and England to which we had been exposed during the Napoleonic wars. Even Thomas Jefferson, perhaps the leading protagonist of liberalism in his day, wrote: "We have experienced what we did not before believe, that there exist both profligacy and power enough to exclude us from the field of interchange with other nations . . . ," and he assented to measures promotive of national self-sufficiency.

The policy and principles regarded by these statesmen as applicable to the special situation of the United States at that time had a curious influence on subsequent policy in Central Europe. Their operation had been observed by Friedrich List while an exile in this country, and they made a deep impression on him. After his return to Germany he published, in 1840, his "National System of Political Economy," which was destined to exert a powerful influence on the thought of his countrymen.

Meantime, however, it had become apparent that the separate application of these principles by the innumerable little principalities then composing Central Europe was deadening to their economic welfare. A movement, therefore, began about 1828 and culminated within a relatively short period in the establishment of a Customs Union (Zollverein), which permitted free intercourse among the states who joined it. A further extension of the movement so as to include Austria, and perhaps other countries, was checked by political rivalry.

During the second half of the nineteenth century a most unfortunate interpretation of nationalism came quite generally throughout the continent to be inculcated in the schools and through the press as patriotism, and was enforced by social ostracism.

Offensive Measures

Offensive rather than defensive economic nationalism was steadily emphasized. Not so much economic independence and self-sufficiency as, rather, economic control and self-aggrandizement became the basis of national policy. A striking characteristic was the development of the dumping of surplus production into the home markets of competitors.

The spirit of offensive rather than defensive nationalism was intensified by the great war and it has permeated the policies of the new states which have since come into existence. When it is remembered how many new national boundaries have been drawn and, therefore, how much narrower are national markets and how much more restrictive is the application of nationalistic policies, it is clear that the need of some modern form of Customs Union in Europe is now more imperative than was the need for the German Zollverein a hundred years ago.

The commercial restriction and high tariffs maintained by the old nations and adopted by the new ones are keeping producers in perilous dependence on their home markets, for these markets are too small to absorb enough of their output to keep labor and capital effectively employed. This has lessened their production per capita and has accentuated their economic poverty.

The extension of this practice has deprived Great Britain of a large part of her continental market. It also tends to make her own unprotected market a dumping ground for the products of continental countries which they cannot exchange among themselves. As a result, Great Britain has been forced to give serious consideration to the feasibility of adopting similar trade restrictions as a measure of self-defense.

Per Capita Production.

The economic well-being of a people depends entirely upon the amount of their production per capita.

Production per capita depends upon the division of labor, the adoption of lavor-saving devices, the standardization of mass production, and the achievement of economy in distribution.

The distribution of standardized mass production is primarily dependent upon the existence of a wide home market.

Extensive home markets are made possible only by a customs union between states of adequate population with co-ordinate interests and a wide distribution of production among the people.

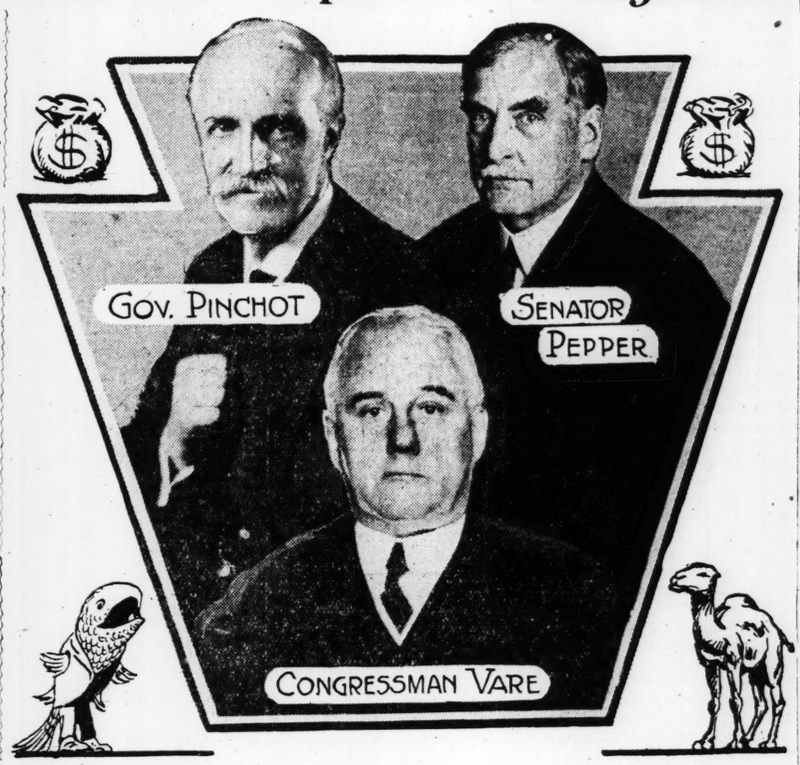
Struggle of Four Millionaires for Senate To Open Political Fleshpots in Pennsylvania

Mellon Will Spare No Effort to Keep Pepper in His Seat — Pinchot and Pepper Rank as Drys—Vare and Strassburger Are Wet—Railway Interests Are Active.



BY CHARLES G. ROSS,
Chief Washington Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, March 20.

NEVER in all the dollar-marked history of Pennsylvania politics have the "boys" faced such a glittering, golden prospect as opens before them today. Four millionaires are in the race for the Republican nomination for Senator. Other millionaires are running for Governor.

The Mellon interests, the biggest financial group west of New York City, the steel interests, the Pennsylvania Railroad and the New York Central Railroad all have a stake in the game.

The State leadership in succession to the late Boss Penrose, the control of the Pennsylvania Legislature, the presidential aspirations of Gov. Pinchot—all these are involved in a campaign that has more ramifications than one could describe on this entire page. National and State organizations of the wets and drys are stripped for battle. There are rumors of deals, trades, combinations.

Profitable Campaign in Sight.

Statements of the candidates, not provocative statements that augur well for a general loosening of pursestrings, fly back and forth. What a chance, what a glorious chance, for the "boys!"

There is none like it anywhere else in today's United States.

The senatorial seat at stake is that now occupied by George Wharton Pepper, a Philadelphia lawyer and blue stocking, apologist for Newberry and the Coolidge administration, and the chief authority on the Canonical law of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States. Pepper is a candidate to succeed himself.

His chief rivals, as the situation looks today, are Congressman William Vare, boss of Philadelphia and former street cleaner extraordinary of that city, and Gov. Gifford Pinchot, ardent conservationist, bone dry and foe of Mellon and the Pennsylvania "gang."

The fourth aspirant is Ralph B. Strassburger, a Norristown publisher who married a part of the Singer sewing machine millions, the angel of the Hiram Johnson campaign in 1920 and the publisher of a history of the Strassburger family, of encyclopedia thickness that is now serving as a door-stopper in the offices of Washington correspondents. Strassburger may be dismissed with this paragraph and the further information that he is wet and a multi-millionaire and succeeded in beating Pinchot for delegate-at-large to the Republican national convention in 1924.

Only Vare Self-Made.

The big three of the campaign are Pepper, Pinchot and Vare. Compared with the others, Pepper is poverty stricken. He is reputed to be a plain or garden variety millionaire. Some of his money came by inheritance—he is a member of the old and comfortably wealthy Wharton and Pepper families of Philadelphia—and some from the practice of corporation law.

Pinchot, like his brother Amos, is a rich man by inheritance; his resources and willingness to spend may be gauged by the fact that he personally, as he stated, invested $125,000 in his campaign for the governorship, four years ago. The foundation of the Pinchot hereditary fortune is New York real estate and he has a big country place in what is known as the "New York fringe" of Pennsylvania—facts which are not overlooked by his political enemies. He, too, is a blue stocking.

Vare is several times a millionaire. He started from scratch and has had a picturesque typically American career. There were three Vare brothers, George, Edwin and William S., all born in what is called the "Neck" section of South Philadelphia. Starting as hucksters, they branched off into street cleaning and eventually got the contract for the cleaning of the entire city. They were the biggest private street cleaning organization in the world. The contract netted them millions. Philadelphia now has a municipal white wing system and William S. Vare is in the road contracting business.

The brothers early became a power in politics, capturing a state senatorship. They held it by turns through many years. First George held it, then Ed, then William S., and now it is in the possession of the widow of one of them. Two years ago, William S. Vare was elected both to the State Senate and to Congress at the same time, on the same ticket, and for a while he held both offices. He resigned from the State Senate after he had arranged for Mrs. Ed Vare to inherit the seat.

Pepper Calls Vare a Jonah.

The Vare machine now dominates the Republican party in Philadelphia and Congressman Vare runs the machine. It is managed very much along Tammany lines; there is an organization running down into the smallest precinct with ward captains and all other functionaries of a large political hierarchy, and the rank and file are held in line through doles and city patronage—the usual method. The machine is one of the largest, and most efficient in the country. Vare has as allies the old Penrose leaders that he used to fight.

In Congress, Vare is known as the boss of Philadelphia rather than for anything he has done in the House. The working of the seniority rule has made him the second ranking member of the Appropriations Committee; he has taken good care of his Philadelphia constituents; he is the author of a 2.75 per cent beer bill—that about completes the tale of his congressional career. Senator Pepper, inspired by the campaign to an unwonted belligerency of speech, has declared in a statement that Vare is a Jonah to the Republican party and ought to be thrown into the Delaware River.

Vare is running for the Senate on a wet platform. His candidacy is seen by some observers as part of a national movement to keep the wet-and-dry issue to the front—a movement that has had such varied expressions as the candidacy of George Brennan in Illinois, the acclaim given Gov. Smith as a potential presidential candidate, and the fight for modification by Bruce, Edge and other leaders of the wets in Congress.

Dry Vote Divided.

However that may be, it looks as if the wet issue gives Vare a real chance to slip into the Senate. Pinchot is as dry as the Sahara, while Pepper, like a good many of his senatorial colleagues, evades the issue with the stock statement that he is for "law enforcement." The theory of the Vare supporters is that the drys will split their votes between Pepper and Pinchot, and the wets, uniting on Vare, will put him over.

Pinchot relies on the drys, on his Roosevelt record (he was T. R.'s forester and had that famous fight with Ballinger), on the fine work he has done for the conservation of natural resources of the nation and his State, on the businesslike administration he claims to have given the State, on his anti-gang crusade and on the hostility that many Pennsylvania ruralites, like their brethren in other states, feel for the cities. Between Pinchot and the Mellons there is continuous warfare, without quarter. Pinchot never overlooks an opportunity to tax Secretary Mellon with his former ownership of stock in the Overholt distillery, and to charge that the weakness of prohibition enforcement is due to the presence of Mellon at the head of it.

Back of the Pepper candidacy are the State organization, his colleague Reed, the Pennsylvania Railroad and the Mellons, and the greatest of these in political power is the Mellon group. There are three active Mellons—the Secretary of the Treasury, his brother Robert and his nephew, W. I. Mellon. The last named is the political spokesman of the group. Closely allied with them is Senator Reed, who is an attorney for some of the Mellon interests.

The Mellons and Reed, himself a wealthy man, will go the limit to send Pepper back to the Senate. He has been tried and has not been found wanting in devotion to the conservative (which is apt to mean the Mellon) interests. His position as the leading Episcopal layman of the country did not keep him from voting for Newberry. He is a man of fine presence and suave and facile speech. He is perfectly regular. He scrapped his own World Court plan in order to accept the President's. He can be counted upon for a defense of the Coolidge administration on any point and at any time.

Railway Attorney for Governor

The Mellons announced this week that they would support for Governor John S. Fisher, of Indiana County. That makes him, so to speak, Pepper's running mate. Fisher is the chief counsel of the New York Central in Western Pennsylvania—a fact which brings the New York Central prominently into the campaign picture and adds to the golden expectations of the "boys." Fisher is also the candidate backed by Joseph R. Grundy, the head of the influential Pennsylvania Manufacturers' Association, who proved his high efficiency as a money getter by raising $800,000 for the Republican campaign of 1924.

One of Fisher's opponents for the governorship is Congressman Thomas W. Phillips of Butler, a wet and a millionaire, and another who may get into the running is Secretary of Labor James J. Davis, the former iron puddler, but now a big Moose and a millionaire.

An amusing thing about the Senatorial campaign is that each of the candidates, the wet Vare, the dry Pinchot and the evasive Pepper, has announced himself a strict adherent of the Coolidge adminstration. They have all contributed further to the gayety of the campaign by hurling statements at each other. Pepper says that Pinchot is a "counterfeit supporter of the administration" and the Governor says that the pious Pepper is bidding for "gang" support.

Nobody can tell how it will come out. Pinchot and Pepper, as already suggested, may split the dry vote and let Vare in; or Vare and Pepper may split the city vote and let Pinchot in; or the organization support and the big money back of Pepper may kill off the others.

Fantastic as it may seem, the Democrats have hopes. They reason that if Pinchot is nominated he will be so heavily scratched by the wets and supported in such a left-handed fashion by the Mellons, that a Democrat will have a good chance of election. It is just conceivable that the campaign will work out in this way. Nobody, however, would dare seriously ot forecast a Democratic victory in a State with the tremendous Republican majority of Pennsylvania.

The one certain thing is that none of the "boys" need go without sustenance in this campaign. Never have they had such an opportunity.

Geneva Fiasco Proves League Won't Work Without American Entry, Lloyd George Declares

But Invitation to U. S. to Join Now Would Be Like "At Home" Card From Moloch, Says He.

By DAVID LLOYD GEORGE.
Former Premier of England.

LONDON, March 20 (By Cable).

ALL the European countries have their postwar troubles—some of these anxieties they share with their neighbors, some are peculiarly their own. Great Britain is no exception. These last few days the British public has been agitated by two events—the report of the coal commission and the strangling of the Locarno spirit at Geneva.

Proceedings at the gathering of nations on the banks of Lake Leman have been profoundly disquieting. They have disappointed the hopes of millions who had been taught by the elaborate and sustained rejoicings of the last few weeks to expect a new era of concord and fraternity as the result of the new Pentecost in the Southern Alps. The Locarno spirit had descended, in the form of the dove of peace, on the heads of the assembled statesmen. Our Foreign Minister walked about like a man with a dazzling halo. You felt that he was holding his head high lest it fall off. A new era had dawned on the world. The old evil dispensation of war and hostile groups had gone forever. Henceforth Europe was a brotherhood with, perhaps, still one naughty brother only left in the far country—Russia.

Then Disillusionment.

Then came Geneva, with its wailing and gnashing of teeth, revealing the bottomless depths of flaming suspicions and hatreds. The lid was taken off the pit and it was no longer the Geneva of the society of nations but the Gehenna of the war. The lid has, with some effort, been pushed back but the fires are there. The Locarno spirit for a time became an appeal. It is now a grim jest. What appeared to be incense was after all but the fumes of brimstone.

The miserable spectacle has confirmed the impressions of those who, like myself, have been convinced that without the presence of America the League of Nations may well become a danger.

It is essential to its successful working that there should be one great and dominant Power which has no traditional concern in the feuds of Europe and whose sole interest is peace on the basis of justice and liberty.

Still this, I fear, is hardly the time to make an appeal to America. Decent opinion in America must have been disgusted by this repellent sight of caged nations snarling and scrambling over the bone of contention. To send a friendly invitation to America to join the League of Nations gatherings at Geneva just now would be like presenting her with a card inscribed "Moloch. At Home. Geneva. Ides of March."

Time Not Ripe, Yet.

Still, the struggle will not come just yet. The Locarno pact was only made possible by a feeling of universal exhaustion. There is a general desire for repose and nothing but the most implacable racial passions could have roused the nations to this recent exhibition. The tired feeling will now resume its sway and nothing serious will happen. Neither governments nor peoples want wars. Even military parades like the Ruhr invasion are unpopular. They cost money and are sterile of results. The God of War must be satisfied with a deferred sacrifice. But there has been a gleam of savage anticipation in his cruel eyes these last few days.

The other worry with which British statesmanship is confronted is the coal situation. This is immediate. If the Government handles it as badly as it did the foreign situation, Great Britain will be plunged into the worst and most disastrous industrial struggle it has ever yet experienced.

To get the country well out of the dangerous position into which the coal industry has been allowed to slither will need the most sapient direction and the most skillful manipulation of forces. For the time being, everybody concerned in the business is by way of being exceptionally cautious. Mr. Cook, the miners' real leader, and Mr. Evan Williams, chairman of the Mine Owners' Association, are treading their way in the dark underground in slippered feet.

Dangerous Situation.

The British coal mine is full of gases that hang around corners and in crevices. They have accumulated for years and ventilation seems rather to have scattered them all over the mine than to have swept them out. Matches have been loosely dropped on the tracks by reckless hands, and if an explosion is to be averted then all must walk about with anguished care.

That is the explanation of the apparently exaggerated caution with which the partisans have moved since the issue of the report. This stooping apprehensiveness is the measure of the peril which all those in the know realize hangs over not only this industry but the whole of British trade and business. Long may this spirit continue! It is the right atmosphere in which to settle.

But the Government ought not to lose time in taking advantage of it. Every moment's delay beyond what is necessary for giving careful and thoughtful consideration to the recommendations of the report imperils the prospect of settlement. The proposals involve heavy sacrifices on all hands. It is just the situation where some violent person, who only sees one side of the problem, may gain a hearing from one of the parties by representing that its share of the sacrifice is unfair compared with the other's.

The report is an able document, and its statement of the position of the coal industry in Great Britain, with its temporary and permanent difficulties, is extremely illuminating.

Report Impartial.

It is completely free from any taint of partiality. It is essentially a judicial document. As for the recommendations, they deal with the present situation and the future development of the industry. As regards the latter, proposals put forward on behalf of the socialists and trade unionists are thrown over. These are dismissed as "unworkable" and "offering no clear social gain." The Commissioners go further and say that they perceive in them "grave economic dangers."

The temperate words used to characterize the revolutionary plan are characteristic of the spirit in which the commissioners have discharged their functions. The proposals they put forward for reorganizing the industry constitute an unequivocal adoption of every suggestion made in the Liberal report on coal and power two years ago. Purchase of minerals by the state—pressure to unify and amalgamate the pits with a view to saving costs and more efficient working—where voluntary efforts to amalgamate fail through obstinacy or greed of the recalcitrant owner, then compulsion to be applied—a fuller partnership between employer and employed—improvement in housing conditions and amenities of life of the miners—contribution

The Demand for Government Aid.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

WHAT is there so remarkable about the effort of the Eastern bankers behind the Cape Cod Canal—to unload a "dead horse" on the Government—any more than about the effort of the Iowa farmers and bankers to have the Government validate farm mortgages for their face value, which is from 20 to 100 per cent higher than their market value, by fixing a price for corn which will permit the farmers to pay off the overcapitalization on their lands and the banks to get their money back with 10 and 12 per cent for interest?

Eastern bankers got stuck on the Cape Cod enterprise. Iowa bankers got stuck on Iowa farm loans. East and West, North and South, the capitalists call for the Government to come to their assistance. There is no essential difference between a big Eastern capitalist-banker and a little Western capitalist-farmer.

New England wants to unload the Cape Cod Canal. Los Angeles wants the Government to dam the Colorado River so that its desert lands may be irrigated to compete with Corn Belt lands. The Mississippi Valley states demand that the Government put into operation the Mississippi-Missouri-Illinois waterway system. Florida wants the Government to develop its Everglades. Alaska wants the Government to develop its alleged resources. A faction of one political party in Chicago demands that the Federal Government shall put its opponents, elected at the polls, out of office into jail, that it may acquire control of the governmental agencies of the Windy City.

Result: California, New England and the Mississippi Valley states will roll logs together and each division will buy itself a whack at the public purse.

World Court a Step to Peace.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

I WONDER if R. E. Dwyer, who writes against the World Court, has ever been out of Silex, Mo.? I wonder if he was ever in France "fighting"? (If not, see "What Price Glory.")

I have visited practically every country in the world, observing as I traveled, working my way round, so I think I should know what I am writing about. Australia is my native land.

America has a foreign trade now, which she never had during George Washington's time, or even to such an extent in 1914. Read a little of foreign and domestic exchanges; you will then realize in what proportions her foreign interests are. This is bound eventually to lead into foreign entanglements, and may cause some controversies, which may lead into war. Let us imagine the League of Nations becoming a real, united affair in 20 years from now and all these nations turned against this country; what then?

I fought four years in the war in the infantry. I suffered "hell." For God's sake let us do something to try and prevent war. "Insulting each other," "talking," will not do it; only action, and I believe the World Court is the first step.

Mistakes and Successes.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

PLEASE publish this bit of inspiration for the benefit of readers.

You've got to pay the penalties of your mistakes, and the sooner you pay them and start all over again, the better for you. Mistakes have to be paid for, and if you do not pay for them right away, life will exact its payment with interest. Let not your mistakes worry you, however. Jump right on to the next thing, and by a grander success, wipe out any past errors.

Each one has within himself, some special gift, whose use will carry him to success. Find your special gifts and put them at the world's service, and you will never lack or need.

Make the most of every day and be in tune with the opportunities that are about you. Be an optimist on yourself, on the world, on your fellowmen. Be happy to do what you can while it is day, ere the night cometh when no man can work. Let not the ghosts of past defeats haunt you today. Each day is a new day and the night has wiped out the past. There is none so old, none so weak, that he cannot be an asset rather than a liability to the world.

Keep in tune with the world and do your best.

Beautify the Exterior of Shaw's Garden.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

LET us hope the committee on beautifying the various plots in our city will not overlook the exterior of Shaw's Garden. Let the city plant some wild flowers or even the old-fashioned petunia, or any kind of hardy showy flowers, with the usual grass borders. Also let us have a life-size monument of Henry Shaw erected at the end of the Flora place plot facing the entrance of Shaw's Garden.

A LOVER OF FLOWERS.

LEARN TO TALK.

The man who can talk is coming back into his own. Washington correspondents are remarking it. They have recently been evaluating our Senators. The members of that body who are known are the men with the gift of speech. Borah of Idaho and Reed of Missouri, it is conceded, are the ablest debaters in the chambers. When they take the floor packed galleries greet them, and colleagues drift in from cloak rooms and even from committee meetings. "The applause of listening Senates to command" is literally theirs.

There are others. Walsh of Montana; Harrison of Mississippi, Caraway of Arkansas, Reed of Pennsylvania, who, though still in his novitiate, has proved his ability and won recognition.

All those Senators, it is pointed out, are lawyers. Their art is the attainment of training. Native talent is a factor, of course, but the technique has been acquired by study, practice, labor.

The business man is found in the Senate and in notable instances has carved his niche. Couzens, for example, has made his mark. He has courage, industry, vision. He is rendering valuable public service. Reed Smoot, the reactionary antithesis of the progressive Couzens, might be called the Senate's pack horse. Facts are his meat and drink. A detail fiend, he possibly knows more about the business of Government than anyone else in Washington. Yet he shies at debate which, for all his years, is still an ordeal and frequently is worsted in exchanges by the nimbler wit and readier tongue of less informed opponents.

The case of Howell of Nebraska was recently discussed by our Washington correspondent, Charles G. Ross, in a postscript on the revenue bill. An equipped, accomplished person is Howell. An engineer of parts, an executive, tested and proved in public affairs as Mayor of Omaha, with a talent comparable to Smoot's for digging out the facts. Howell probed into the schedules of the revenue bill and assailed the unfairness of that measure with statistical volleys. He trudged through droning hours. There was no response, no reaction. Later Senator Reed of Missouri, taking Howell's material, arrayed it in Reedian dress, barbed it, colored it, fanged it, transmuted the moribund encyclopedic recital into living, throbbing news, crashed like a catapult into the first page and got it across to the country.

The bill went through, to be sure, unscathed almost by Reed's pyrotechnics, but that does not mean that Reed's eleventh-hour charge was a mere display. The public now knows the revenue act is a Mellon victory. It knows that wealth has been relieved of taxation burdens it properly should bear. The public knows this perfidy was consummated by the votes of Democratic Senators who abandoned principles which are accepted articles of their party faith.

We are no prophet to say that these recreant Democrats shall meet their day of wrath or that the Republican administration shall be held accountable for the economic consequences that, soon or late, inevitably follow injustice. But once upon a time there was a Senator who did enact the role of seer in somewhat similar circumstances, and La Follette lived to see those seats vacated as he predicted.

This gift of speech, then, which it has long been popular to deride, is really a priceless talent. Indeed the depreciation of verbal beauty, oral or written, has become bromidic. The attitude even obtains in newspaper offices—the last place seemingly such a stupid heresy could enter. It is worse than a supercilious pose. It is a vicious fallacy. The only stories that live, newspaper or otherwise, are the stories that are well told. The style is the man, be he Senator or reporter.

In what he called "an act of faith and of love for that Greek and Latin tradition, wherein resides all wisdom and beauty," Anatole France has given us an affectionate survey of "The Latin Genius." This is what he says about the language of La Fontaine:

> La Fontaine loved words and could choose them. Only on this condition can a man be a writer. Words are ideas. Just reasoning demands a rigorous syntax and exact vocabulary. I cannot but think that the foremost people of the world will be found in possession of the best syntax. * * * Nothing advances the spirit of humanity more than a good dictionary.

Where did Fa Fontaine find his words? France gladly explains: In the old tale-tellers and poets: in Amyot, Montaigne, Rabelais. But "his chief source, and his richest, and the one that never failed him was the tongue of the populace." Sage counsel there to ambitious youth storming up the world. It explains the senatorial eminence of the Borahs and Reeds. It explains the dominance of Wilson in a demented world. It explains Everett's forgotten failure and Lincoln's deathless message at Gettysburg. Learn to talk. Our stylists are immortal.

THE DEATH OF KITCHENER.

Although a flood of memoirs, confessions and revelations has been unloosed since the war, the facts surrounding Lord Kitchener's death have never been made public. Recently, under the leadership of Frank Power, a London editor, the whole subject has been reopened and there is much clamor to learn the whole truth about the last cruise of the Hampshire.

Power is emphatic in his denunciation of the Government, claiming that if it was not absolutely guilty of sending Kitchener to his death, it at least was guilty of the grossest negligence. He says the Hampshire was unseaworthy, that members of the crew were suspected of disloyalty, and that proper use was not made of the lifeboats after the Hampshire began to sink.

An emotional demonstration took place the other day in a London theater when a film called "The Tragedy of the Hampshire" was displayed by Power before an audience of 2500 persons. Kitchener, who in his lifetime exercised a strange fascination for the British, seems to maintain the spell in death. Nearly to a man the audience signed a petition calling for an inquiry, and a lone objector narrowly escaped manhandling.

A full inquiry into the Hampshire sinking was held by the Admiralty, but the results have been shrouded in secrecy. That has had its inevitable consequence, namely, to stir curiosity to a morbid pitch. An honest exposure of the facts, whatever their nature, can hardly be as dangerous as a raging interrogation. Surely, a nation that has survived the vast disillusionment of a war may be trusted to hear the truth about a dead beloved leader.

LABOR IN RUSSIA, ITALY AND HERE.

Labor in Russia is supposed to be in the saddle, riding fast towards the millennium. Russia is today ruled in the name of labor, by a small minority of fanatical dreamers who have tried to abolish capital, but have so far been unable to substitute anything as efficient in its place. They have ruined the country. There is no "room at the top" for anyone except politicians and bureaucrats. There are no "captains of industry," no labor banks, no profit sharing, for there is no profit. And the biggest industry of the political triumvirate that rules Russia is the spreading of propaganda whose object is to ruin other countries where capital gives opportunity for labor, for individual ambition, and for honest profit as the reward of initiative, invention, skill and industry.

Italy, under Fascism, has just passed a law the effect of which will be forced labor. Professing to have the well-being of the workers and the nation at heart, Mussolini's Government, by this compulsory arbitration law, absolutely forbidding strikes and agitation, gags and shackles the worker. In his eulogy of the new law, Mussolini truly says that "capitalists are today captains of industry, and sway the fate of thousands of workmen." The new law, however, will make this sway jug-handled. Italian workers who would be glad to sway their own fate to some extent will find their liberty to do so gone. But Mussolini has no use for liberty, as he has loudly proclaimed.

In the United States, with capital prospering as nowhere in the world, labor is better paid, has more privileges, and more opportunity. It is constantly making progress as a whole, in spite of set-backs here and there. The growth of labor banks during the past year, as scheduled by the World Almanac, is one proof of this. These banks, which have increased at about the rate of one a month, have had but one failure. They now have a capital in excess of $8,000,000, and their total resources exceed $101,000,000. In profit-sharing the United States is outstripped by France and England, but it is here, and many industries practice it. Russia cannot. Italy may have it, but at the expense of the workers' freedom. Our system is not perfect. We have still to find remedies for many abuses and wrongs, and to solve the problem of the equitable distribution of wealth. But with labor free, no better substitute for capitalism has been found.

DEGENERATE TIMES, THESE.

These be degenerate times, as witness the wolf story from Kinderhook, Ill. The Kinderhook region has recently been infested with prowling bands of gray wolves which have killed many sheep and have even attacked cattle. What have the Illinois farmers done? Have they, in the manner of their forefathers, taken their rifles from the wall, bit off a big chew of tobacco and fared forth to protect their property? No, they have called upon the Federal Government for aid, and the Federal Government, quick to seize an opportunity to increase the feeling of dependency upon it, has sent an expert wolf hunter to the scene. Yes, the Federal Government employs expert wolf-hunters. It also employs experts on nearly every other phase of life from the pre-natal stage to the post-mortem. We doubt not that many a self-reliant old settler will turn in his grave as the depressing news from Kinderhook is broadcast over the astral radio.

FORD AND MUSCLE SHOALS.

Henry Ford is still interested in Muscle Shoals. A telegram from his secretary requesting a copy of the resolution recently passed by Congress authorizing negotiation for the property is construed to mean that Ford will submit another bid. If this inference proves correct popular interest will be revived in this project and public curiosity will closely scrutinize the Ford offer.

One condition which Congress apparently will insist upon is that the tenure of the lease shall not exceed 50 years. Public opinion will approve that provision. It probably would prefer a 25-year limit if such were practicable. Indeed, it seems as if it would be advisable to grant terms that would make the shorter period practicable. For this reason: Hydro-electric power is in its infancy. Its possibilities are unknown. As the last of our great natural resources it is incumbent upon the Government to administer it most cautiously.

The present sentiment of Congress favors private operation of this power plant. Perhaps public sentiment does, too. But public sentiment, we believe, wants the Government to retain ownership of Muscle Shoals. Experience and prudence support that position. As owner the Government can compel the lessee to manage the property capably and in conformity with public policy.

With the future of hydro-electric an unknown quantity it may well transpire that the developments of the next 10 or 20 years will demonstrate the necessity of the Government's both owning and operating a motive power which in private hands, it has been predicted, will mean industrial dictatorship.

THE RADIO BABEL.

The White bill for radio regulation now before Congress is intended to clear our muddled airways by empowering the Secretary of Commerce to issue licenses, allocate wave lengths, divide time between respective stations and prevent a monopoly in radio communication. This is a large order and only an optimist would believe that the White bill, salutary as it is, can quell the radio babel effectively. Proposed legislation may settle some of the physical problems afflicting our newest great industry, but what we must have is a Code of the Air corresponding to what nations have embodied in maritime law.

Our American broadcasters who have been rushing into the air with sermons, bedtime stories, jazz music, propaganda of all sorts, advertising of commercial products have proceeded and are proceeding on the principle that the air is free. There are now 536 major broadcasting stations in the United States and only 89 wave lengths distributed among them. The Department of Commerce has tried to calm these bumptious and exuberant radio exploiters by allotting the same wave lengths to stations hundreds of miles apart and dividing the time so they will not conflict. But radio fans who own superheterodynes of considerable power can receive stations from coast to coast.

The result has been utter confusion and serious impairment of the pleasure of radio.

This chaos will continue and the progress of radio will be doubtful, until broadcasters come to realize that the air is not free. They must then submit to suppression or stricter regulation than the White bill proposes. Otherwise radio will be ruined for the public.

THE MAN FROM BAGDAD.

Yesterday a man from Bagdad strode upon my threshold;
He was strong and brown and beautiful;
There was quiet pathos in his voice and music;
There was the old, old look in his eyes
Of one who has seen and suffered much.
His smile was warm and lovely,
His teeth were like rows of white daisy petals.
When he entered my door
All his country and people came before me,
Bagdad rose up before me—
Its mosques and its minarets,
Its filth and its swarming streets,
Its beggars and markets and booths,
The unceasing noise of its looms,
Its priceless and beautiful rugs;
I saw old-faced, thin children;
I saw stalking starvation;
I saw the thousands of Christians
Fleeing like lambs from the slaughter,
Seeking a refuge in mountains;
I saw roads red with blood;
I heard the shouts of the victims.

Today I am scouring my pots and pans
And sweeping the crumbs from the floor;
But my soul has expanded a measure;
I am richer and deeper and broader,
For I have touched another life;
I have seen its sorrows,
I have seen its agony;
I have felt a kinship,
I have felt the eternal invisible cord
That binds all like me to all the men of Bagdad.
As long as I can feel that like little waves
The rhythm of life flows about me,
The rhythm of life flows within me,
And alike flows in far away Bagdad.
I am content to scour my pots and pans.

RANDOMLETTES.

Wonder if the good Lord likes coloratura prayer? I refer to the prayers in which he is beseeched with a lot of rhetorical, fine-spun verbiage. Note some of the printed Lenten prayers, also the long-winded ones we hear in church. Are they sincere solicitations or just verbal stunts?

A lot of advertisers don't seem to know how to punctuate. Neither do sign painters, as the various funny ones sent in by your sign hunters would prove. Therefore I have long wondered whether the clothing firm of Hart Schaffner & Marx is named after two or three persons. Does a comma belong after Hart or does it not?

Gosh ding it! The young folks are continually having things better than we had them when young. Now the millers are supplying flour in bags out of which towels may be made. Mother made our shirts out of flour bags, and it didn't at all occur to our kid companions to get a kick out of making sport of the big triple X we carried conspicuously on our backs.

THE HARD LOT OF POETS.

Poets are born, not made. The reason for this is obvious—if poets could learn their profession, as bricklayers do, nobody would care to be a poet. Hence, the fate is thrust upon you.

If you develop one particular poem-form, brutal friends will sooner or later ask you if you are unable to write anything else—and sooner rather than later. If you do not try to develop any form, friends will be perfectly frank and tell you it is about time you were finding yourself. A poet gets more advice than a newly minted husband who lives with her people.

If what you write is good, you'll starve to death. However, you will have the satisfaction of knowing that 100 years from now the maid will dust off your complete poems at housecleaning time, and that high school pupils will set in more or less rapt, more or less attention, while the teacher speaks of your iambic tetrameters. That is the reason all poets affect to despise wealth—sour grapes. If you doubt it, show one of them some money. If, on the other hand, your stuff is so idiotic that a moron appreciates it, some syndicate will pay you a fancy price for your bilge. However, writing one a day is hard on the rhyme, the meter, the idea, and the rhyming dictionary. But if you get paid for the stuff, you can buy a new rhyming dictionary.

If you write about what pleases you and have a weakness for loud wassail to boot, people will suspect you of not being a poet. If, on the other hand, you rhapsodize about children and nature, you will be invited to speak before women's clubs, and be introduced to people you do not like. This will necessitate combing your hair, so it is just as well, perhaps, to be a rough neck.

If the poet marries, he has two people to support—see remarks above regarding money—and his wife may have brilliant, but impractical, ideas regarding the art of writing. If the poet stays single, it is a difficult task to grow poetic over imaginary girls.

The simplest solution of the problem is to remain an amateur and contribute to the column. JOS. D. HEADE.

SPRING.

She paused. I saw her from the window, near Spirea clumps like fountains petrified,
And she seemed to enjoy so much
The innocent passion of blossoming Spring,
I thought her a fair acolyte of Ver,
Tending each shrine of Spring with maidenly devotion.

See her count the flame-tongues of red tulips
On the hill-side, climbing stairs like priests
On their way to some high-mass of praise,
Their blood-red vestments fluttering in the wind.

Now she stands upon the marble edge
Of a blue-silk lake on which a playful wind
Makes little tucks and ruches.

Then having visited them all, the shrines of Spring,
She comes into the house, carrying with her
A little Spring for me, and these dull walls
Where delphiniums soon wilt to dust.

The MIRROR of PUBLIC OPINION

THE OTHER FLORIDA.

From the Springfield (Mass.) Republican

IT isn't all Palm Beach in Florida. There are still great districts untouched by the magic of Aladdin's lamp—and ignored utterly by the horde of land speculators and investors who have made fabulous profits out of the boom. Is everyone rich in Florida? The following appeal which The Republican has received from Mrs. Charles R. La Bella of Deerfield, Broward County, discloses a Florida that still exists, yet is seldom referred to in these gilded times on the East and West coasts:

> The Woman's Club of Deerfield, Fla., is seeking to establish a public library in this section of our great country. Here everything is needed—school buildings and church replaced by new buildings, playground equipment, stoves and homes and library. The Woman's Club has been already favored by some gifts of books from New England homes and I am writing this letter to ask if there are not others who may have books packed away in attics or which could easily be spared from overcrowded book shelves. * * * *
> This means that new life is stirring in the State's darkest corners. Yet, in view of the hundreds of millions of dollars that have been made in Florida real estate, in view of the fact that the wealthy people of Florida pay no income and inheritance taxes; in view of the swarm of millionaires with their women, who luxuriate at the Florida beaches and hotels in the winter season, does it not seem as if the place to which to take up a collection for town like Deerfield in Broward County were St. Augustine, Jacksonville, Palm Beach, Orlando, Miami, Tampa and St. Petersburg, where one pays something like $100 a week for a room without a bath. If the generous people of New England are moved to send their old books and old magazines to Deerfield in order to furnish a public library, or send equipment for the assistance of Broward County schools, or money to build a new church, their aid will be appreciated. This may be an extreme thing to do, with as much publicity as possible. For the national advertising involved might make the Florida that has the golden horn of plenty remember the other Florida which has to go begging up North in order to obtain the bare necessities of civilization and culture.

THE JURY PROBLEM.

From the Lowell Courier-Citizen.

THERE is bound to be discussion following out of the Quigley case because of the power of a single juryman to upset a trial. There have been arguments for many years to the effect that a majority vote, or a two-thirds vote, should be permitted to decide in a jury trial. This has not met with very conspicuous favor, and yet it is possible to be sure to get an added impetus from such circumstances as that we are considering. It might be argued that sinister forces could nullify the whole course of enforcement by tampering with sure of a single member in every jury, even though no one alleges that it was done in this case, and that the obdurate talesman would invariably profess an honest conviction, which it would be practically impossible to assail. It is not an easy problem to solve.

from mining royalties toward the miners' welfare—greater application of science to the winning and using of coal—state organization and assistance for research—no working of mines by the state but the nation to utilize to the full its new power as owner of the mines to insist on more efficient equipment and organization and better conditions of life for the miner and his family.

The report of the commission has naturally given much satisfaction to the Liberal press. When these recommendations were made by a Liberal committee, Tories scoffed at the idea and Socialists abused the authors.

Now Regarded Seriously.

All parties now treat the proposals seriously, while still reserving full right to abuse the authors. The commissioners predict that if their recommendations are put into operation, the industry will once more reach "heights of prosperity which will surpass anything in the past."

But before we ever reach that efficient and prosperous future there is an abysmal present which must be bridged. The coal industry is, according to the commissioners, on the brink of disaster. Without the Government subsidy, the coal trade would now be working at a loss of a shilling and sixpence per ton. Of the wages now paid, over 20 per cent is being found by the British taxpayer. Or, to put it another way, a shilling and sixpence per ton of profit and a shilling and sixpence per ton of wages come straight from the taxes.

That is an impossible situation for any country. It is quite indefensible for a country that bases its claims to confidence on the ground of the soundness of its finance.

The commission demands, in language of stern force, that the subsidy should be brought to an end. On the other hand, if it ceases, three-fourths of the pits close down, unless the costs of production can be drastically and immediately reduced. Of Northumberland coal, 99 per cent is raised at a loss—more than 90 per cent of Durham coal and over 80 per cent of South Wales and Scottish coal.

How can the costs be reduced at once?

The commissioners bluntly answer that it can only be done in three ways. The owners must go without profits until prices are increased or methods improved. The miners must surrender the 11 per cent advance on the minimum basis which they secured in the Ruhr boom. Thirdly, the hopelessly unprofitable pits must close down and the state must assist to transfer the miners to more profitable collieries.

I fail to see how the cumulative effect of all these suggestions can bridge the chasm, which at present aggregates £30,000,000 to £40,000,000 a year. But another and greater difficulty presents itself. The heaviest sacrifice is that which the miners are called upon to make. Can they be persuaded to agree to it? I read with care the speeches of Mr. Herbert Smith, Mr. Cook and other leaders. Temperate as they are in form on this point, they seem to be adamant.

I am afraid the Chancellor of the Exchequer is not yet out of his difficulties. He must indeed be a sanguine man if he thinks that May is the last month the coal bill will be presented to him for payment.

M'MILLAN HOSPITAL PLANS UNDECIDED

Period of Years May Elapse Before $1,000,000 Gift Is Used.

Although impending partition of the $7,000,000 estate of William McMillan, who died in 1901, likely will release the $1,000,000 gift of his widow for an eye, ear, nose and throat hospital for Washington University, it is probable that the hospital will not be built for some time, perhaps a period of years.

Dr. W. McKim Marriott, dean of Washington University School of Medicine, explained yesterday that a building suitable, and a scope necessary for a university hospital, would require about $600,000 for construction alone, leaving only $400,000 as endowment from which to draw upon for operation.

"Of course, we might hope for assistance from the Rockefeller Foundation to carry on a research department, and if we should be fortunate in getting additional endowment by gift, the work might proceed," Dr. Marriott said. "However, the magnitude of plant in the Barnes Hospital group now is our chief worry. We encounter a yearly deficit now of about $200,000, which must come from the Community Fund. An ear, eye, nose and throat hospital built immediately would materially increase have reached the saturation point have reached the satisfaction point so far as annual contribution by the public is concerned.

Might Invest Gift.

"The plan under which the Barnes endowment was handled may be adopted in the McMillan gift. It will be recalled that the Barnes endowment was allowed to double itself by interest over a long period of years before the hospital was built. Similarly, it might be well to invest the $1,000,000 McMillan gift and let the interest accumulate a building fund, thus retaining the original gift as a permanent operating endowment.

"However, an ear, eye, nose and throat hospital would be a valuable addition to the Barnes group of hospitals, and, of course, the McMillan gift brings the day of actual existence of such an institution upon the horizon.

A friendly suit asking for an accounting of the estate of William McMillan and for distribution of the estate among the heirs, was filed in Circuit Court yesterday.

A Friendly Proceeding.

Plaintiffs are nephews, grandnephews and grandnieces, mostly residents of Detroit, and defendants are the St. Louis Union Trust Co. and William K. Bixby, in charge of the estate. Attorneys for the plaintiffs issued a statement that the suit was "purely a friendly proceeding," without "significance" and that bad management of the estate was not charged, expressly or by implication.

A suit, similar in some respects, was filed Thursday by Bixby in which he asked that the estate be partitioned among heirs and that he be compensated for his management of the estate since 1901.

Says U. S. Should Help Europe's Economic Union

panied the maintenance of a high tariff in our own country has been made possible by the enormous size of the home market, our unsurpassed abundance and variety of natural resources, our genius for organization, our wide adoption of division of labor and labor-saving devices, and our comparatively equitable distribution of the national output through high wages. To apply our tariff in the nations of Europe who have not these other advantages that we enjoy is to sacrifice economic welfare in order to gratify a dangerously narrow nationalistic spirit.

A study of continental European economic conditions shows that nothing less than an economic entente, which would extend the limits of their markets and diversify their resources and their facilities, will enable them even approximately to follow our example.

Collective Tariff Acts.

In other words, if the principal continental countries, with or without Great Britain, would enter into a Zollverein or economic union, they might adopt for collective application a tariff policy like our own. Then, with their large aggregate population, they would be able to imitate our efficient standardized mass production. If this is done it will increase their per capita production, and if they will then distribute the output, as we do, through high wages, they will increase their home market to where it will be sufficient. Such a development and such a distribution will then, in Europe as with us, sound the knell of communism.

Argumentts have appeared in the press of this country which interpret such a European entente as a menace to the development of our enterprise. In fact, however, whatever would increase the economic well-being and therefore the purchasing power of our European customers would result to our benefit.

Our tariff laws profess to provide for such measure of protection to our industries as will equalize the disparity in cost of production resulting from low European wages. A raising of the wages paid in Europe to our own standard would naturally modify the application of this policy, so as to gradually increase our trade relations with other countries.

Interstate Flow.

The proposed European economic union would tend to develop a flow of economic life between European states such as exists in our United States.

Had the nullification efforts of South Carolina in 1832 been successful, and had each of our states attempted to develop a self-sufficient economic policy, we would never, of course, have approached our present economic well-being. Such a European union might embrace either all of the European states or be segregated into two or more group unions having in mind the amount of population and diversity of interests which would best co-ordinate.

In view of the controversial political aspects of tariff policy, it may be well to emphasize the fact that the question of protection or free trade of Europe with the rest of the world is not involved in recognizing the necessity of an economic union among the European states. The effect a European union or unions would have on our present economic relations would be to substitute a consolidated protective tariff for the present numerous protective tariffs. It would, however, so increase the European production or economic well-being as to greatly increase our export possibilities.

As the economic and social interests of a people are infinitely more important than their purely political interests a European Economic Union will certainly modify that overdeveloped nationalism which is the greatest menace to the world's peace.

U. S. Should Participate.

Here in America, while each State of the Union is most jealous of its political entity, it makes little difference to our citizens in which State they reside because of the freedom of trade between the States. Germany was evidently deeply conscious of his difference in interests when she established a national economic council as an advisory board of the Reichstag.

It is to be hoped that, if invited to participate in the proposed conferences, we shall accept the invitation. We should participate not with any view, of course, to becoming a party to such an economic entente as Europe needs, but in order to counteract the mistaken interpretation given to our own policy and to aid in promoting the general economic welfare of all nations.

THE OTHER FLORIDA.

The Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

It isn't all Palm Beach in Florida. There are still great districts untouched by the wand of Aladdin's lamp—and ignored utterly by the horde of land speculators and promotors who have made fabulous profits during the boom. Is everyone rich in Florida? The following appeal which The Republican has received from Mrs. Charles Della Bella of Deerfield, Broward County, discloses a Florida that still exists, yet is rarely mentioned in these gilded times on both East and West coasts:

"The Woman's Club of Deerfield, Fla., is seeking to establish a public library, and this section of our great country is in need of everything is needed—school buildings and church replaced by new buildings, playground equipment, stores, and homes and library. The Woman's Club has been already favored by some gifts of books from New England homes. And I am writing this letter to ask if there are not others who may have books packed away in attics or which, if sold easily be spared from overcrowded book shelves. * * * *

"This means that new life is stirring in the State's darkest corners. Yet, in view of the hundreds of millions of dollars that have been made in Florida real estate; in spite of the fact that the wealthy people of Florida pay no income and inheritance tax; in view of the swarm of millionaires, and their women, who luxuriate at the Florida beaches and hotels in the winter season, does it not seem as if the places might to take up a collection for towns like Deerfield in Broward County were? St. Augustine, Jacksonville, Palm Beach, Orlando, Miami, Tampa and St. Petersburg? Where one pays something like $100 a week for room without a bath. If the generous people of New England are moved to send their old books and old magazines to Deerfield in order to furnish a public library, or send equipment for the manual training of Broward County schools, or even help to build a new church, their aid will be appreciated. This may be an excellent thing to do, with as much publicity as possible. For the national advertising involved to make the Florida that has the golden days of plenty remember the other Florida that has to go begging up North in order to obtain the bare necessities of civilization and culture.

THE JURY PROBLEM.

From the Lowell Courier-Citizen.

THERE is bound to be discussion growing out of the Quigley case because of the power of a single juryman to upset a verdict. There have been arguments for many years to the effect that a majority vote or two-thirds vote, should be permitted to decide in a jury trial. This has not met with conspicuous favor, and yet it is pretty hard to get an added impetus from such instances as that we are considering. It will be argued that sinister forces could bank on the whole course of enforcement by making the vote of a single member in every jury, even though no one alleges that it was done in this case, and that the obdurate talesman would invariably profess an honest conviction which it would be practically impossible to assail. It is not an easy problem to solve.

RAILROADS QUITE CAREFUL WHEN A PRESIDENT TRAVELS

Precautions Taken on Coolidge's Trip to Vermont Described by Executive in Charge of Train.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, March 20. — So careful are the railroads when a President travels that a pilot train is sent ahead to test the tracks and virtually all routine is upset that he may reach his destination safely. Even the hundredth chance of accident or delays is eliminated, H. J. Reynolds, an assistant superintendent of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, said today in describing the trip of President Coolidge to Vermont.

The highest executives took personal charge of the President's special. Block controls were examined and hand-picked veteran crews were selected for the pilot train and the special. Railroad police were at signal offices and stations along the route. The pilot train had a full crew but no passengers. Between it and the special, all train movement was suspended.

Special police were aboard and along the route relief engines waited with steam up. As long as the special was in transit, the heads of the railroads were in constant touch with it.

Reynolds has supervised trips of Presidents Roosevelt and Wilson, the Prince of Wales and other noted personages. He made the trip from New York to New Haven with President Coolidge.

116-YEAR-OLD COURT DECISION FOLLOWED

Suit of George J. Devoto Against Brother Over Property Is Dismissed.

Citing as an authority for his decision an opinion handed down by the Massachusetts Supreme Court 116 years ago, Circuit Judge Calhoun yesterday dismissed the suit of George J. Devoto, 6642 Clayton avenue, for a half interest in $60,000 apartment property owned by his brother, Nicholas A. Devoto.

The plaintiff averred that he had entered into a verbal contract with his brother and their mother as a third party in 1905 under which Mrs. Devoto went to Agosta, an island town in the Adriatic Sea, to visit her sister, Mrs. Mary Garbina. The brothers financed the trip and Nicholas Devoto accompanied the mother. The admitted purpose of the visit to Mrs. Garbina was to get her to leave her property to Mrs. Devoto. The mother agreed in turn to will the estate, at her death, to the Devoto brothers in equal shares.

The missioners returned and reported to George, who had remained at home, that the trip was a success. However, Mrs. Devoto died in 1913, three years before her sister, and when Mrs. Garbina's will was read it developed that she had left her entire estate to Nicholas Devoto. The estate amounted to $60,000.

In rendering a decision Circuit Judge Calhoun said that the old Massachusetts opinion was the nearest authority he could find. This opinion held, the Judge declared, that contracts made between parties to gain the property of an ancestor after death of the latter amounted to fraud on such ancestor. Such a contract, it was held, would be productive of mischief and against public policy. Judge Calhoun, therefore, ruled that the alleged contract described by George Devoto was void and dismissed the case.

CARELESS DRIVER GETS 10 DAYS IN JAIL, IS FINED $100

Steve Wichlenski, Who Tells Court of Four Children, Thinks He Got Off Easy.

Steve Wichlenski, 45 years old, 4302 Farlin avenue, was in Police Court yesterday on the charge of careless driving at Thirteenth street and Cass avenue March 3, when he steered his truck into a parked automobile, injuring Miss Viola Schoenhorst, 2827 North Spring avenue, and Mike Malkonian, who was stading near. He pleaded guilty and said it was the first time, that he had four children and hoped the Judge wouldn't be hard on him.

Judge Beck was not unsympathetic, but something had to be done to curb careless driving. Fines did not seem to help much. So he gave Wichlenski 10 days in jail and a fine of $100. The fine might be paid in installments after the jail term was served. Wichlenski seemd to think he had been let off easy.

STREET CAR SEATS ALTERED TO PROVIDE STANDING ROOM

New Arrangement Facilities Movement of Passengers Toward Rear End.

The United Railways has altered the seating arrangements in about 150 cars to widen the aisle and facilitate the movement of passengers from front to rear of the car under the front entrance and rear exit system.

The alteration was accomplished through a lengthwise side seat extending half the length of the car on the right side and a similar seat on the left side in the rear half of the car. The ordinary seating arrangement is preserved for half the length of the car on opposite sides to keep a balance.

Additional alterations are being made in a number of other cars, principally of older design.

FUND TO COMBAT DISTEMPER

Dog Lovers Asked to Support Scientific Research.

In connection with the announcement that the source of distemper has been discovered, an appeal has been issued by the American Distemper Committee for funds to continue scientific investigations looking to a preventative or cure for the disease. Experiments with ferrets give hope that immunity from the disease may be obtained for dogs.

"If every dog owner and dog lover will send us $1, we will have sufficient funds to go on and complete our work," said a statement received from Charles H. Tyler, Ames Building, Boston, Mass., to whom the contributions are to be addressed. Those who give $1 to the fund will received a calendar bearing a reproduction of Walter A. Dyer's "A Prayer for a Pup."

Electric Sewing Machines

—An Artistic Piece of Furniture—An Efficient Sewer

Those wanting to own one of these Machines, but desiring to realize the value of their old machines, will be allowed $30 —for the old machine, to be applied toward the purchase of the Domestic Console or Desk Electric models.

¶ Domestic console model Sewing Machines do not strike an unsightly note in any room—they're built into attractive, well-designed console table cabinets, beautifully finished. Made ready for sewing by simply lifting the top—and useful for dressing table, serving table, library or radio table when not needed for sewing. Mechanically, these Machines will appeal to every woman who sews.

WARNING LANTERNS STOLEN

Thefts in County Endanger Public Safety.

The St. Louis County Gas Co. has asked the Sheriff's office to look for the persons who have been stealing red warning lanterns from the trenches at night recently, endangering public safety. This has occurred notably at Forsythe and Pennsylvania boulevards, University City; Helen avenue, Fairview City, and on St. Charles, Clayton and Lemay Ferry roads.

The company ordinarily suffers a loss of 10 to 15 lanterns a month, but several nights ago 27 out of 40 on Clayton road, between Pennsylvania and Hanley road, were taken, and Thursday night 26 were stolen elsewhere.

Yes, stop it. You know by your own experience it is only a makeshift, a false prop against a collapsing wall, and that it is undermining your health, because it tends to retard the circulation of the blood. Why, then, continue to wear it? Here is a better way, which you can now prove for yourself, free of charge.

STUART'S PLAPAO-PADS are entirely different—being medicine applicators made self-adhesive purposely to prevent slipping and to hold the distended muscles securely in place. No straps, buckles or springs attached. No "digging in" or grinding pressure. Soft as Velvet—Flexible—Easy to Apply—Inexpensive. Continuous day and night treatment. Not merely mechanical support. No delay from work. Hundreds of people, old and young, have gone before officers qualified to acknowledge oaths, and swore that the PLAPAO-PADS cured their Ruptures—some of them most aggravated cases—and of long standing.

IRREGULAR EATING CAUSED INDIGESTION

"My experience in the World War left me with an awfully bad case of nervous indigestion," says Mr. William M. Sanders, who lives on Cherokee Avenue Extension, Gaffney, S. C.

"I was treated for this for several months but could get no relief. I tried many things but nothing helped me. I suffered with bad spells of vomiting and at times had severe gas pains in my stomach. I grew worse and worse. I was thin and poor. I was extremely nervous. I could not bear for any one to speak to me. Pains would dart through my body. I was in a generally bad condition. I thought this was caused from irregular eating during the war.

"One day I decided to try Thedford's Black-Draught, because what I read of it sounded reliable. I got a package of the medicine and began to take it regularly. It was not long before I began to notice a decided improvement. The bad gas pains soon ceased, the vomiting stopped, and I was decidedly less nervous. I kept the medicine up because I was so pleased with my improvement.

"We have not been without Black-Draught in our house for over three years. It has a regular place in our medicine cabinet. I weigh now more than I have ever weighed in my life and am in good health. When I have a little spell of indigestion or constipation now, I take a small dose of Thedford's Black-Draught before and after breakfast and in less than no time I'm all right. I would not be without it in my home for anything.

"My wife thinks as much of Black-Draught as I do. It has done her worlds of good."

Black-Draught is sold everywhere; price 25 cents a package. JA-23

TWO CONVICTIONS IN FEUD CASE REVERSED

State Supreme Court Rules Trial Court Erred in Not Giving Manslaughter Instruction.

By the Jefferson City Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

JEFFERSON CITY, March 20.—Two of the four men sentenced to the penitentiary for murder, growing out of the Knight-McCormick feud in Johnson County today obtained a new trial, when Division No. 2 of State Supreme Court reversed the convictions of Frank Carey and Chester Kerr, accessories to the murder of George McCormick, and remanded the case for a new trial.

The reversal was on the ground of failure of the trial court to give the jury an instruction on manslaughter. Carey and Kerr were convicted of second-degree murder and sentenced to 15 years each in the penitentiary.

Harry Knight, who was sentenced to 15 years for the McCormick murder, "jumped" his bond after the Supreme Court last December affirmed his conviction. His brother, Guy Knight, also was sentenced to 15 years for the murder, but was killed in October, 1924, in a suburb of Kansas City, when resisting arrest by a Constable. Guy Knight was at liberty on appeal bond at the time.

Carey now is in the penitentiary serving a 10-year sentence from Greene County for robbery of a filling station in Springfield. He was out on bond pending trial on the McCormick murder charge. Kerr is at liberty on bond.

The Knight-McCormick fued grew out of a dispute over hogs owned by the Knight family trampling the garden of George McCormick in Holden, Mo., where the families lived in adjoining houses. Several fights occurred among members of the families. George McCormick was beaten and kicked to death on June 23, 1923, when he was assaulted by Ben Knight and his two sons, Harry and Guy Knight. Carey and Kerr were with the Knights and were charged as accessories in the murder.

During the fight, Lowell McCormick, small son of George McCormick, fatally wounded Ben Knight with a shotgun. The McCormick boy never was brought to trial.

Judge David E. Blair, who wrote the opinion, said the information against the defendants charged that Harry Knight killed McCormick by beating him on the head with a pistol, and that Carey and Kerr were accessories. He pointed out that a manslaughter instruction was given in the separate trial of Harry Knight, but none in the joint trial of Carey and Kerr. He said there was no evidence to show that Carey or Kerr actually struck McCormick, and that they were entitled to a jury instruction for manslaughter.

On that ground the convictions were reversed.

TERMINAL RAILROAD USES TELEPHONE DISPATCH SYSTEM

New Equipment Replaces Former Telegraph Keys and Block Signals.

The Terminal Railroad Association has installed and put in effect a complete new system of dispatching and reporting trains by telephone, replacing the telegraph system.

The new circuits, supplementing the block signal system, are equipped with loud-speaking telephones and electric amplifiers, a recent invention in the use of which the business is conducted in an ordinary tone of voice. The delay of calling and answering is obviated; also the spelling of words and figures, as in the Morse alphabet.

Thus the movement of trains and traffic is expedited on the Terminal System, particularly movements to and from the Union Station over the three main routes through Granite City, East St. Louis and Grand avenue, where 280 passenger trains and twice as many more freight and switching movements are handled daily.

ALBERT HELMERICHS, TOBACCO MAN, DIES IN THE EAST

He Was 73, and Had Been Connected With Business Since Boyhood.

Albert Helmerichs, president of the C. J. Helmerichs Leaf Tobacco Co., 205 Market street, died yesterday of pneumonia in a hospital at Hartford, Conn. He left St. Louis last Monday for a business trip East, contracted a cold and was taken to the hospital Thursday. He was 73 years old.

Mr. Helmericha had been connected with the company, founded by an uncle in 1860, since boyhood. He resided at 3509 Halliday avenue. His son, Robert A. Helmerichs, secretary-treasurer of the firm, has gone East to accompany the body back to St. Louis. Other survivors are his widow, a daughter, Clara, and a son, A. P. Helmerichs, who is connected with the company.

MASTER PLUMBERS' CONVENTION

The forty-second annual convention of the Missouri State Association of Master Plumbers will convene at 10 a. m. tomorrow for a three days' session in the Adams room of Hotel Statler.

The need for public comfort stations along main highways and how to obtain them, the necessity for a master plumber to know his overhead expense, and how to get a full quota of apprentices are to be among many subjects of interest to the convention.

CITY ASKED TO PROVIDE FUNDS FOR 2 WELFARE INSTITUTIONS

Missouri League Makes Request for Municipal Lodging House and Child Guidance Clinic.

The Missouri Welfare League, meeting at Second Baptist Church Friday night, adopted resolutions calling on the city to provide means in the budget for 1926-27 to maintain a municipal lodging house and a child guidance clinic, the latter to provide assistance to the juvenile court, social agencies and to parents in behalf of unadjusted children.

Crime and punishment and the effect of reformative measures on the individual and society as a whole was discussed by Walter B. Bodenhafer, professor of sociology of Washington University; Miss Bertha B. Howell, of the Community Council; Capt. F. J. Primavesi, warden of the City Jail, and Charles F. Zukoski, an attorney.

Cured His Rupture

I was badly ruptured while lifting a trunk several years ago. Doctors said my only hope of cure was an operation. Trusses did me no good. Finally I got hold of something that quickly and completely cured me. Years have passed and the rupture has never returned, although I am doing hard work as a carpenter. There was no operation, no lost time, no trouble. I have nothing to sell, but will give full information about how you may find a complete cure without operation, if you write to me, Eugene M. Pullen, Carpenter, 478 M Marcellus Avenue, Manasquan, N. J. Better cut out this notice and show it to any others who are ruptured—you may save a life or at least stop the misery of rupture and the worry and danger of an operation.

WIEDEMEIER ASSIGNS $15,000 TO HOFFMAN

Chicago Fur Dealer Must Overcome Many Obstacles to Collect It, However.

John V. Wiedemeier is a big-hearted man, after all. In return for stealing Leonard Hoffman's wife, he is willing to give the Chicago fur dealer the $15,293 of his bankroll which the St. Louis police have impounded. But Hoffman will have to do the collecting.

These facts became known yesterday when Chief of Detectives Kaiser was served with an assignment made by Wiedemeier to Hoffman in Chicago, March 10. Hoffman had sued Wiedemeier for $15,000 for alienation of affections shortly after the prince of swindlers and Mrs. Margaret Hoffman were caught in St. Louis on their "honeymoon trip" from Chicago last October. For a long time Hoffman was unable to get service on Wiedemeier, but apparently he succeeded and Wiedemeier proposed the above mentioned settlement.

Collecting Will Be Hard.

The only trouble with Wiedemeier's big-heartedness is that Hoffman doubtless will have a hard time collecting. Chief Kaiser shows no disposition to surrender the impounded funds. And Attorney Henry Kortjohn, a member of the Board of Police Commissioners, told a Post-Dispatch reporter that the police had no intention of voluntarily handing over the Wiedemeier cash to Hoffman.

The struggle for the Wiedemeier greenbacks was further complicated by a Supreme Court writ of prohibition staying Criminal Judge Calvin N. Miller from enforcing his order directing Chief Kaiser to deliver the $15,293 to the Sheriff, who was to hold the fund as evidence. Judge Miller is given 30 days before the writ is returnable and another 30 in which to make reply, according to Assistant City Counselor Senti.

Six Attachments on File.

Meanwhile, Hoffman has joined the numerous claimants who want Wiedemeier's money. Six attachments brought by those persons whom Wiedemeier duped in his nation-wide bunco operations are pending. The Board of Education has a claim under the bond forfeiture arrangement through which certain moneys forfeited by defendants become part of the general school fund. An attorney who represented Wiedemeier when he was under arrest here also has a claim.

"For the time being," said Attorney Kortjohn, "this money stays in the safe at Police Headquarters. Members of the board have been made personally liable for its lawful disposition and we're not going to surrender the fund until we are certain we are giving it to the party or parties entitled to it."

To add to the irony of the situation, Wiedemeier very generously gave Hoffman full power of attorney to collect the money. But he might just as well have said, "Try to get it!" Hoffman, incidentally, was granted a divorce from Mrs. Hoffman in Chicago, March 2.

DISCOVERER OF MOREHOUSE COMET TO BE HERE TOMORROW

Drake University President Will Attend Alumni Reunion—Speaks Tuesday at City Club.

Dr. D. W. Morehouse, noted astronomer, discoverer of a comet which bears his name and president of Drake University, Des Moines, Ia., will be in St. Louis tomorrow and Tuesday.

Tomorrow he will be a guest of ministers of the Church of Christ at a luncheon at the Y. W. C. A. and in the evening will attend a reunion of Drake alumni at Union Avenue Christian Church. Tuesday he will address the City Club at luncheon on the topic, "Is the Sky the Limit," dealing with his astronomical work, which he is carrying on.

Working at the Yerkes Observatory in 1908, Dr. Morehouse discovered his comet, whose actions now are studied widely. He accompanied solar eclipse expeditions to Colorado in 1918 and to Catalina Island in 1923. In recognition of his work the city of Des Moines erected a municipal observatory in a park, where the public may look at heavenly bodies under guidance of Drake professors.

Advertising Committee to Meet.

The Municipal Advertising Committee will meet at 11 a. m. Tuesday in the office of Mayor Miller at City Hall. C. A. Munroe, chairman of the board of directors of the Laclede Gas Light Co., the new chairman of the Municipal Advertising Committee, will preside and plans for the advertising of St. Louis in the coming months will be discussed. Walter B. Weisenburger, vice president of the National Bank of Commerce, is the retiring chairman of the committee.

SEEKS RECEIVER FOR YARD-O-METER FIRM

Stockholder Alleges Corporation Has Lost Money Constantly and Is Insolvent.

Suit for a receivership was filed yesterday against the Yard-o-Meter Corporation, 1224 Monroe street, by a stockholder, Dr. Charles W. Thierry, on the ground that the company is insolvent, has lost money constantly in its efforts to market a fabric measuring device, and is trying to assess stockholders for 10 per cent of their holdings, although the stock was represented to be nonassessable when sold.

Dr. Thierry holds stock with a par value of $500 and is one of 500 stockholders in St. Louis, according to his attorney, John B. Reno. The company was placed in receivership in 1923 at the instance of the Attorney-General, who charged it had issued $475,000 of stock, although authorized to issue only $125,000. The receivership was dissolved later.

CARLETON DRY GOODS CO. SUES STATE NATIONAL BANK

Action Based on Alleged Appropriation of Firm's Deposit of $8138 Last October.

Suit to recover $8138.47 was filed yesterday by the Carleton Dry Goods Co. against the State National Bank. It is alleged that, when the Ferguson-McKinney Co. failed last October, the bank appropriated that sum on deposit by the Carleton Dry Goods Co. to apply as added security on a loan to the Carleton-Ferguson Co., which was the holding company controlling both Carleton Dry Goods and Ferguson-McKinney. The Carleton company also asks for $25,000 punitive damages.

The State National Bank recently sued the Carleton-Ferguson Co. for $85,000 due on a loan. E. B. Pryor, president of the bank, declined to comment upon yesterday's suit.

C. & N. W. SEEKING

C. & N. W. SEEKING ST. LOUIS ENTRANCE

Negotiation for Trackage On With Litchfield and Madison, Which Will Build Connection.

The Chicago & Northwestern Railroad plans to extend its line from the present terminus at Benld, Ill., into East St. Louis and probably to St. Louis through the Terminal Railroad Association, if permission is granted by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

This was indicated Friday in Springfield, Ill., when the Illinois Commerce Commission gave the Litchfield & Madison Railroad permission to extend its line four miles from Staunton to a point between Edwardsville and Benld, where it will connect with the Chicago & Northwestern.

John Duncan Sr., president of the Litchfield & Madison, said yesterday that he could not discuss arrangements with the Chicago & Northwestern company until the Interstate Commerce Commission passes upon the request for permission to extend his company's lines.

The Litchfield & Madison now leases an 18-mile stretch of its line from Glen Carbon to East St. Louis to the Illinois Central for its right-of-way. The Chicago & Northwestern will use virtually the entire right-of-way of the Litchfield & Madison from Staunton to East St. Louis if present negotiations are successful.

Harry L. Hamnill, general agent in St. Louis for the Chicago & Northwestern, said the company had been negotiating for several years with a view of establishing connections into St. Louis but he was not advised of immediate plans.

It is likely that freight business ern alone will be handled here by the Chicago & Northwestern since the passenger service between St. Louis and Chicago is provided extensively by other lines.

Henry Miller, president of the Terminal Association, said application by the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, would be a perfunctory matter, and that it could come in either as a tenant or proprietary line. There are now 28 railroads operating through the Terminal, half of them proprietary lines.

GEORGE BIEDERMANN'S NAME USED BY SUSPECTED ROBBER

Alleged Automobile Thief Gave Name and Address of an Innocent Man.

A young man who was arrested Wednesday at Gravois avenue and Devolsey street, on suspicion of having stolen an automobile, saw fit to give the police his name and address as George Biedermann, chauffeur, 3309 South Eighteenth street, and he was booked under that name in the police records. It has been learned, however, that the man who was arrested gave the name of another man.

There is a George Biedermann living at the South Eighteenth street address, but he is not the man who was arrested. This Biedermann is in the employ of the Anchor Coal Co., 4237 Park avenue. He drives his own car and has never been arrested for any cause. The man who was arrested has confessed that Biedermann is not his name and that he had no right to use Biedermann's name.

GAPS IN ILLINOIS STATE HIGHWAYS TOTAL 196 MILES

Committee Appointed at Decatur Meeting to Campaign for Quick Completion fo Highways.

Efforts to unite all interests affected in a fight to get gaps in Illinois highways under the $60,000,000 bond issue closed this summer are being pressed as a result of resolutions adopted at the hard roads meeting held in Decatur Tuesday. W. F. Hardy of Decatur is chairman of the committee, appointed at the meeting to work with the State Highway Department.

It developed at the meeting that stretches totaling 196 miles on highways under the $60,000,000 bond issue are not under contract.

Right of way has not been obtained, but satisfactory progress is reported on 61 miles, divided as follows: Route No. 12, French Village-East St. Louis, 4 miles; No. 13, Belleville-East St. Louis, 3.6 miles; No. 13, Harrisburg, 7.21 miles; No. 20, McHenry, 3.55 miles; No. 3, Nameoki-East St. Louis, 2 miles; No. 4, Pontiac, 2.17 miles; No. 16, Staunton, 7.30 miles; No. 28, Fieldon-Hardin, 7 miles; No. 39, Bloomington-Le Roy, 14.68 miles; No. 40, Milledgeville, 2 miles; No. 43, Mason City-Easton, 7.30 miles.

Unsatisfactory progress toward getting right of way on 76 miles was reported as follows: Route No. 2, north from Clinton, 6.63 miles; No. 7, La Salle-Ottawa, 12.76 miles; No. 15, Mendota-Sandwich, 22.55 miles; No. 1, Harrisburg, 2 miles; No. 39, Le Roy to county line, 7 miles; No. 13, Pinckneyville-Vergennes, 14 miles; No. 14, Carmi 1 mile; No. 31, northeast of Rushville, 6.7 miles; No. 3, Virginia, 4.28 miles.

Court proceedings are pending over right of way for 41 miles as follows: Route No. 31, Fulton, 2.7 miles; No. 13, Sparta-Pinckneyville, 26 miles; No. 24, Springfield-Rochester, 12.7 miles.

Sets New Auto Luxury Standard

As exquisitely luxurious an automobile interior as was ever designed is shown in this picture of a limousine body by a firm of British custom body builders. Upholstery, loose fatigue cushion and robe are of antique style tapestry, copied from the Stuart period. The floor is covered by a heavy skin rug. The roof and door panels are in hand-polished marqueterie work. The door frames are of walnut. Roof and corner lights are in a delicate flower design, and the fittings are of solid silver. The front seats, which are separate and adjustable, are somewhat of the bucket type, so modified as to resemble luxurious arm chairs. On the driver's side is a specially designed quick-lift window, for signaling. In the center of the instrument board is an ornamental bow cupboard. The board carries speedometer, clock, flow-meter, gradient meter, oil gauge, thermometer, ammeter, radiator shutter control, electric switchboard and cigar lighter. Cigar lighters are also in the rear compartment. The doors are so made that by taking out several screws the panels can be removed, and the mechanism of the window lifts reached for adjustment. The lower part of the exterior of the body is in white, the upper part and fenders are in ebon black, and the hood is of polished, natural finish aluminum.

U. S. CAPITAL SAID TO SEEK CONTROL OF FOREIGN CARS

General Motors Reported to Be After Mathis; Peugeot Factory Official Coming to This Country.

By JIM LANCE.

Some time ago a number of news stories came out of Detroit to the effect that various automobile manufacturers were considering production of little "bug" cars for the American market. There was much discussion of the possibilities of such small European-type cars for American city use. It was prophesied that they would run 40 to 50 miles on a gallon of gasoline, use an incredibly small quantity of oil, and run so lightly on tires that bills for rubber would be too small to notice.

It was stated at the time that the Continental Motors Corporation, which last Sunday announced that within 90 days it would be producing the Argyle single sleeve valve engine and would announce the names of manufacturers who were interested in it, had imported a British-built 7-horsepower car as a pattern for a small American machine.

Report G. M. C. Wants Mathis Car.

Then for some time nothing more was heard about "bug" cars.

Now, whatever may be the connection, or lack of connection with what has gone before, it is at least worth noting that there are persistent reports in Europe that the General Motors Corporation is negotiating for control of the Mathis car, which is made in two models—a six-cylinder machine rated at 11 horsepower and a four-cylinder rated at 1230 horsepower.

Peugeot Official Coming to U. S.

Also, it is reported in Paris that there is a possibility that American capitalists may become interested in the Peugeot factory, which makes a very good light automobile, and that the vice-president of the Peugeot company is to sail soon for this country, bringing a number of members of the factory engineering staff and heads of departments. It is said that he plans to introduce a new small Peugeot car to the American automobile industry and also to demonstrate an engine, developed by Peugeot, which uses cheap fuel oil instead of gasoline.

The Mathis 6-cylinder car has a bore of 2.17 inches and stroke of 3.13 inches (approximately 2¼ by 3¼). It has 4-speed transmission and 4-wheel brakes, and the touring model and closed model with Weymann fabric body sell in England for the same, about $1300. On a large production basis, of course, it could be sold for far less.

The new 11-horsepower Peugeot has a 4-cylinder engine with bore of 2.75 inches and stroke of about 4½ inches. Its crankshaft has two ball bearings, and starter is at the front end of the engine. The Peugeot has worm drive to the rear axle, which results in very quiet operation. In the past, the small Peugeot has been sold in England around $1100.

Interesting Situation.

In view of Continental Motors' announcement that it plans to build Argyle single sleeve valve engines for American cars, it is worth recalling that Vauxhall Motors, the British automobile firm which was acquired by General Motors recently, makes one 6-cylinder model powered with the same Argyle single sleeve valve motor. ROAD TO DEATH VALLEY RIM PLANNED TO AFFORD MAGNIFICENT PANORAMA

DEATH VALLEY is to be made more accessible to motorists by way of Nevada. Improvement of the highway from Beatty to Chloride Cliff, a spectacular scenic point on the rim of Death Valley, has been approved by engineers of the Nevada Highway Department.

The cliff gives a panoramic view of Death Valley and Mount Whitney, the lowest and highest points in America.

NATIONAL 45 M. P. SPEED LIMIT LAW IS RECOMMENDED

But Hoover Conference Committee Would Permit Such Speed Only Upon Special Highways.

Recommendations, by the Committee on Uniformity of Traffic Laws and Regulations, as to adoption of national automobile speed limits will be one of the most important matters to come before the Hoover conference on street and highway safety that is to open at Washington next Tuesday.

Forty-five miles an hour is the highest speed consistent with the principles of highway safety, the committee holds. This maximum speed limit is recommended to apply only to cars traveling on special highways and on main routes where cars approaching from side roads or intersecting highways are required to stop before entering or crossing. The recommendation is in line with the action of Florida in legalizing such speed on main highways and the suggestion by highway officials in Wisconsin, Minnesota and some other states, that 45 miles an hour be permitted on main country highways, outside of cities and towns.

The committee's attitude on speed limits was reached after months of argument, which centered largely in debate over the advisability of setting any limits other than a general rule for "reasonable speed" and the working principle that the motorist who cannot at all times bring his car to a dead stop within the clear space immediately ahead of him is

TATE MOTOR CO. REPORTS HEAVY DEMAND FOR AUTOS

Illustrating the lively demand for automobiles this winter, as compared with that at the same time in previous years, the Tate Motor Co., Inc., reports delivery last Saturday of 34 new Dodge cars at retail, two new Dodges at wholesale and sale of 14 used cars, certainly a substantial business for one day. In the first 13 days of March, the firm states, it delivered 121 new Dodge cars at retail.

Fifteen Dodge commercial cars and Graham Brothers trucks were delivered by the Tate Co. on the day following the automobile show.

CHEVROLET HEAD AND SALES CHIEF COMING TO ST. LOUIS

W. S. KNUDSEN.

R. H. GRANT.

Both W. S. Knudsen, president, and R. H. Grant, vice-president and general sales manager, of the Chevrolet Motor Co., are scheduled to attend and address the annual convention and banquet of Chevrolet dealers in the St. Louis district in St. Louis tomorrow.

U. S. CAPITAL SAID TO SEEK CONTROL OF FOREIGN CARS

eral Motors has absorbed the Yellow Truck Co. with a license to make the Knight sleeve valve engine, which has two sleeves instead of one. Not long ago, John N. Willys, whose Willys-Overland Co. makes the Willys-Knight car powered with the Knight motor, got control of the Stearns-Knight factory, which also makes a Knight-engined six.

Some of the most famous European cars, including the Daimler and the Minerva, have Knight engines. Both the Argyle and Knight engines are capable of very high speed, as has recently been proved on the tracks, and both are well adapted to holding high compression, a fact which may be important if antiknock gasoline becomes widely enough distributed in this country to make use of the economical high compression automobile engine practicable.

A Voison car, which has a four-cylinder Knight engine, last fall ran six hours at a speed of 106 miles an hour, and last month the same car averaged 118 miles an hour for 50 miles on the Montlhery track in France. A Panhard-Levassor, developing 200 brake horsepower from a four-cylinder sleeve-valve engine with four-inch bore and 5½-inch stroke, ran 115 miles in an hour in France.

Altogether, a situation rich in possibilities has developed. It may result in no change of practical interest to American motorists, or may decisively affect automotive development in this country.

THREE HUDSON-ESSEX PRICE CUTS IN QUICK SUCCESSION

Prices of Hudson and Essex cars are now at the lowest levels in their history as the result of three recent moves by the Hudson organization. The first announcement was of adoption by Hudson-Essex distributers and dealers of an "at-your-door system" of quoting motor car prices, replacing the f. o. b. factory plan of many years' standing. Closely following this came the action of making the Federal automobile tax reduction immediately effective. On top of these moves, the announcement was made the past week of a reduction of $50 a car on the Essex and Hudson coaches and the Hudson Super-Six brougham.

The "at-your-door" plan tells the buyer at his first inquiry the whole amount which his equipped car will cost him; there is no f. o. b. base price, to which he must add $100 or more to get the actual price.

AUBURN CAR FACTORY EARNS YEAR'S DIVIDENDS IN 2 MONTHS

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

AUBURN, Ind., March 20.—The directors of the Auburn Automobile Co. have declared the regular 75-cent quarterly dividend on the common stock of the company and an extra dividend of $1, payable April 1.

E. L. Cord, president of the company, said the directors decided on this extra dividend because nearly the full year's regular dividend was earned in the first two months of the year and they felt they were justified in dispersing this extra dividend to the stockholders in view of the exceptionally good outlook for the year 1926.

The company will deliver in the first quarter nearly four times as many cars as in the first [illegible] of 1925, and it is expected in the first five months it will deliver more cars than in the entire year of 1925. Production, which for 30 days had been averaging 60 cars a day, is now [illegible] cars a day.

How Better Buick Design Reduces Owner Care

Buick covers its spark plugs with a steel cover so they cannot get wet and short circuit. Other elements of the Buick ignition system, likewise, are guarded against the trouble that rain or sleet brings to many cars.

Buick uses the most expensive type of dry plate multiple disc clutch, thereby avoiding clutch trouble and frequent adjustment.

Buick provides automatic lubrication for the universal joint. This important unit cannot go dry and wear out. It is lubricated from the transmission.

Buick oil pump design provides positive lubrication to every part of the engine, even in zero weather.

Buick Mechanical 4-wheel-brakes have no liquid in them to expand and contract in changing temperatures. Their direct mechanical action insures all-year safety.

Buick provides a "Triple Seal" (air cleaner, oil filter, gasoline filter) to protect the Buick Valve-in-Head engine from the wear and trouble caused by dirt and grit.

And Buick is the only car that has the "Sealed Chassis," with every operating part inside an iron or steel housing to keep dirt out and lubrication in.

The Better Buick needs but little owner care

Buick has made good with the American public by its absolute dependability.

This motor car is more sturdily built, of materials that are the pick of the world. And besides, a Buick is designed to take care of itself at points where owner care is required in other cars, and often neglected.

Busy people need give a Better Buick only minimum attention to hold indefinitely its surpassing performance.

ANNUAL AUTO BILL OF U. S. FIGURED AS $14,000,000,000

Total Includes Cost of Cars, Accessories and All Phases of Motor Car Operation.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, March 20.—It costs the people of the United States $14,000,000,000 a year to indulge its preferences for rubber-tired self-propelled vehicles, it is reported by the Bureau of Industrial Technology.

This estimate was attained as the result of a survey of data accumulated by the bureau, by the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, by the Motors and Accessories Manufacturers' Association, by associations of tire producers, insurance companies, labor organizations, gasoline and oil distributers.

The survey emphasizes the fact that the automotive industry is now the biggest business in the United States. The nation's annual retail investment in automobiles is greater than the total value of our farm crops. It is more than twice as great as our total annual investment in the construction of new buildings.

"Production of automobiles now proceeds at the rate of 4,000,000 a year," the Bureau of Industrial Technology reports. "The average retail value, with accessories, is $1000 per car. Not all of this represents American investment, however, for the value of automobiles for export in a year has mounted to $250,000,000.

"The last annual registration of automobiles was approximately 20,000,000. The Bureau of Industrial Technology concludes that it costs the average automobile owner somewhat over $700 a year to own and operate his car. But if each man, woman and child in the nation would help pay the bill, the annual pro rata assessment would be $117.

"One of the countless direct results of the great development of the automobile industry is the enormous road-building program now in progress in this country, calling for the expenditure of about $1,000,000,000 a year, to say nothing of the enormous upbuilding of all suburban communities."

To demonstrate "where the automobile dollar goes," the bureau made public the following table representing the annual national

ANNUAL AUTO BILL OF U. S. FIGURED AS $14,000,000,000

Total Includes Cost of Cars, Accessories and All Phases of Motor Car Operation.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, March 20.—It costs the people of the United States $14,000,000,000 a year to indulge its preferences for rubber-tired self-propelled vehicles, it is reported by the Bureau of Industrial Technology.

This estimate was attained as the result of a survey of data accumulated by the bureau, by the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, by the Motors and Accessories Manufacturers' Association, by associations of tire producers, insurance companies, labor organizations, gasoline and oil distributers.

The survey emphasizes the fact that the automotive industry is now the biggest business in the United States. The nation's annual retail investment in automobiles is greater than the total value of our farm crops. It is more than twice as great as our total annual investment in the construction of new buildings.

"Production of automobiles now proceeds at the rate of 4,000,000 a year," the Bureau of Industrial Technology reports. "The average retail value, with accessories, is $1000 per car. Not all of this represents American investment, however, for the value of automobiles for export in a year has mounted to $250,000,000.

"The last annual registration of automobiles was approximately 23,000,000. The Bureau of Industrial Technology concludes that it costs the average automobile owner somewhat over $700 a year to own and operate his car. But if each man, woman and child in the nation would help pay the bill, the annual pro rata assessment would be $117.

"One of the countless direct results of the great development of the automobile industry is the enormous road-building program now in progress in this country, calling for the expenditure of about $1,400,000,000 a year, to say nothing of the enormous upbuilding of all suburban communities."

To demonstrate "where the automobile dollar goes," the bureau tells the public the following table representing the annual national expenditure on investment and upkeep:

Cost of cars, accessories	$ 3,750,000,000
Insurance	300,000,000
Upkeep, repairs	2,000,000,000
Depreciation	2,500,000,000
Tires	618,000,000
Garaging	900,000,000
Interest on investment	500,000,000
Gasoline	1,200,000,000
Drivers' wages	1,600,000,000

NATIONAL 45 M. P. H. SPEED LIMIT LAW NOW RECOMMENDED

guilty of reckless driving and subject to arrest.

The standards finally fixed by the committee, of which Gen. Nathan W. MacChesney, of Chicago, is chairman, include:

Fifteen miles an hour when approaching a grade crossing, passing a school, approaching an intersection of traversing curves, or in a business district where more than 50 per cent of the buildings in a given block are occupied for business.

Twenty miles an hour in a residential district.

Thirty-five miles an hour under all other conditions.

Ten miles an hour faster on special highways when clearly designated as such and where vehicles are required by an ordinance to stop before entering.

Operation of cars above these definite limits is prima facie evidence that the operator is guilty of law infraction, the committee holds.

"At various committee meetings," MacChesney said, "representatives of certain automobile clubs made a bitter fight against any speed limits being incorporated in the act. But, generally speaking, those primarily interested in safety favored the prima facie speed limits, and this was universally true of Police Chiefs, Judges and others responsible for law enforcement, while the demand for their omission came almost wholly from club representatives.

"It became evident in the committee fight that much of the misunderstanding and trouble in speed limit enforcement was due to a lack of understanding of the words 'prima facie' in law. Everybody agrees with the basic principle that cars should always be able to stop within the clear space ahead of them, but no one charged with the enforcement of law believed that it could be made a practical law as the sole rule of speed regulation. It is but one of several safety factors, including efficient braking systems, condition of tires and highway, and the personal reactions of the driver, which must be observed in safe automobile operation.

"In order to make the simple speed limit rules doubly clear the committee inserted the following section into the proposed act:

"'Any person driving a vehicle on a highway shall drive the same at a careful and prudent speed not greater than reasonable and proper, having due regard to the traffic, surface and width of the highway, and to any other conditions then existing, and no person shall drive any vehicle upon a highway at such a speed as to endanger the life, limb or property of any person.

"'Subject to the provisions above, and except in those instances where a lower speed is specified in this act, it shall be prima facie lawful for the driver of a vehicle to drive the same at a speed not exceeding the limit standards set in the act, but in any case, when such speed should be unsafe, it shall not be lawful.'"

LEE ADDRESSES ENGINEERS AT MISSOURI UNIVERSITY

"The Automobile Industry in the United States and in Missouri," was the subject of an address delivered Thursday night by Capt. Robert E. Lee, manager of the St. Louis Automobile Dealers' Association, before the College of Engineering of the University of Missouri at Boones Lick Tavern, Columbia, Mo. The dinner was the culmination of a three-day program of the Sixth Annual Engineers' week at the State University. It was attended by about 300 members of the student body, the faculty, including the head of the university, Doctor Brooks, and a number of members of the Alumni Association, Engineers' Division.

Lee told the embryo engineers that the automobile field held out stronger promise for engineers than any other single manufacturing field, in that 17 kinds of engineers including the efficiency engineer and the highway engineer, were employed in the development of the motor car from the crude metal in the mines and the crude cement in the rock up to the final task of the efficiency engineer of speeding up production.

The BEST Machine is the One that RUNS at its BEST for the LONGEST Time

Everywhere crowds gather to admire the new Auburn car . . . a car must be a striking advancement to attract such tribute today.

Everywhere people say the Auburn is "the most beautiful"; the "most original and distinctive" and the "smartest car" . . . naturally such praise pleases the rapidly increasing number of Auburn owners.

But, while Auburn owners are not unmindful of their car's rare charm of appearance, they are even more appreciative of Auburn's inner character.

Its external does please the eye . . . its newest design is a guarantee of high resale value . . . but it is the internal efficiency and endurance of the Auburn that makes it the leading car of today.

Neither short, undersized nor cramped, the Auburn is handy to park and easy to handle. Neither top-heavy, overweight nor clumsy, the Auburn offers unusual roominess, economical performance, and marvelous comfort.

It is the long sought combination of "big" and "little" car advantages into the ideal automobile. Fundamentally a motor car is no different from any other machine. It cannot escape the final test of its worth . . . "how long does it run at its best?" Therein lies the secret of Auburn's phenomenal sales growth—and the reason Auburn owners enjoy a kind and degree of automotive transportation that is unexcelled today.

Come and see it. Drive it. Compare it and if it does not sell itself you will not be asked to buy.

PROGRAM FOR CURBING TRAFFIC LAW VIOLATION

Hoover Conference Committee Offers Detailed Report as Basis for Nation-Wide Action.

Uniform, impartial enforcement of reasonable requirements by adequate and properly organized police is a primary necessity in reducing street and highway accidents, says the National Conference on Street and Highway Safety in its report which it will submit to that conference March 23-25.

Severe punishment is held to be the only means by which certain traffic violators can be prevailed on to respect the traffic laws and regulations. At the same time the committee holds that prevention of accidents and not vengeance on those causing accidents should be the ultimate aim, and the value of warnings should be utilized to the fullest extent.

Some Recommendations.

The committee emphasizes the need for organized procedure in the Traffic Violations Bureaus, with fixed schedules of penalties. This the committee believes, can quickly and effectively dispose of minor infractions, which constitute a large percentage of all violations, thus giving the courts more time to deal with the more serious cases. The committee notes the successful operation of such bureaus in Detroit and Kansas City. Hhe privilege of deposit and forfeiture of collateral without trial or appearance, however, is strongly condemned.

Special traffic courts are recommended for the larger cities and special traffic sessions of the general courts for smaller cities. Even in rural districts, where there is any considerable amount of motor traffic, the committee holds that traffic courts or special traffic sessions of the regular courts are desirable to replace the country justice of the peace.

Would Fix Penalties.

To fortify the courts and discourage pressure to defeat justice, the committee recommends that minimum penalties for the graver offenses be fixed by law, severe enough to act as a real deterrent. A schedule of penalties, including such minimum penalties for the more serious offenses, is included in the report. This schedule designates as major offenses reckless driving, operating when intoxicated and evading identification in accidents involving personal injury.

The committee recognizes that fines are the only feasible punishment for small offenders, but believes they have a deterring effect if materially increased with each subsequent offense.

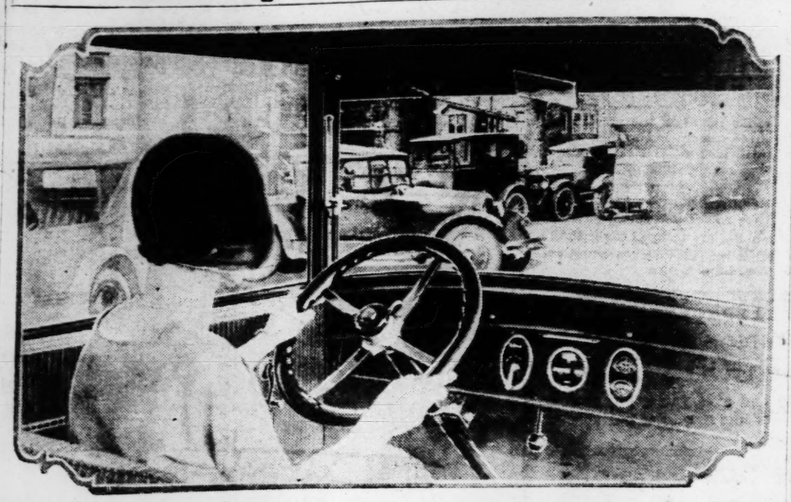
Urges More Jail Sentences.

Imprisonment it finds to be a much stronger deterrent than a fine, and recommends more frequent use for serious offenses, including mandatory imprisonment for a second conviction for driving while intoxicated.

Suspension or revocation of operators' license is thought, however, to be the strongest deterrent of all. The committee recommends that authority to suspend or revoke licenses rest solely with the motor vehicle administrator, but that the courts freely recommend suspensions or revocations and that the administrator be required to give careful consideration to all such recommendations. Mandatory suspension is recommended for operating while intoxicated, for evading identification in accidents involving personal injury, and for a second conviction for reckless driving.

The committee strongly disapproves the fee system. It holds that neither the traffic officers nor the courts should receive any part of the proceeds of money collected from traffic convictions.

Eliminating "Blind Spots" Helps Drivers



WHAT the use of steel bodies with their narrow steel corner pillars and one-piece windshields mean in greater visibility from the driver's seat, and consequent safer handling of a car, could hardly be better illustrated than by this picture. The whole story is there. It happens that this photograph is taken looking out from a New Day Jewett sedan. The things that it shows so vividly are true of any steel automobile body of similar design.

When You Trade Your Car—

Ford Owners are continually being approached by automobile salesmen who wish to "accept" Fords as part payment on more expensive cars.

It is perfectly logical that automobile dealers everywhere should be eager to trade with Ford owners. The Ford is the most popular automobile in the world. No other used car is so easy to sell as a used Ford—because everyone has confidence in Ford quality.

And it is not expensive to re-condition, since Ford replacement parts are lowest in price.

Most automobiles carry greater discounts to dealers than the Ford—another reason why other dealers may offer the Ford owner a larger trade-in allowance.

But when you come to buy a new car, bear these facts in mind:

The amount of the trade-in allowance you can get is not the most important thing for you to consider. The big thing is the difference you have to pay. And remember, that the higher priced car will not be so easy to dispose of when you come to trade it in.

If you wish to trade your Ford for a new automobile, stick to the car that you know to be dependale, useful and economical. Go to your Ford dealer!

He will give you a fair and liberal allowance for your present Ford and will gladly arrange payment of the balance to suit your convenience.

When the deal is over, and you have your new and improved Ford, you will have the satisfaction of knowing positively that you took advantage of the greatest automobile value the world has ever seen—and saved a lot of money, too

BUSSES HEAVILY TAXED BY NEW KENTUCKY LAW

Weight Tax, License and Fee Ranging as High as $15 a Seat Imposed.

Kentucky's new motor bus law, creating the office of commissioner of motor transportation and two deputies, who have authority to license taxicab lines in cities and motor bus lines between cities, has been signed by Gov. Fields.

The act levies a tax of $1 the 100 pounds on the gross weight of motor vehicles, a license tax ranging from $10 to $50 according to the bus, and a fee ranging from $1.50 for taxicabs to $15 for the largest buses for each seat.

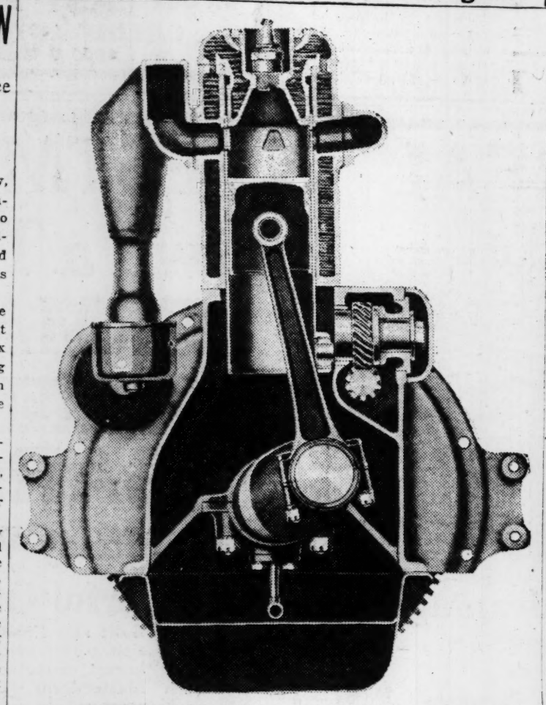
Certificates of public convenience and necessity from the commissioner of motor transportation, under the new act, are prerequisites to the licensing of any motor bus line.

In cases where there are already two or more lines on a proposed route, it is made the duty of the commissioner to refuse a license, unless it can be shown to his satisfaction that the existing lines are not sufficient to take care of the traveling public and the existing operators refuse to put on sufficient service to take care of the traveling public. Operations must begin within sixty days after a certificate is issued, or it becomes void.

Drivers of licensed motor busses must carry a certificate from the commissioner, and must wear a badge issued by the commissioner showing that they have taken examinations and have passed with a satisfactory grade the following requirements: Driving ability, intelligence, experience, habits and physical fitness evidenced by a physician's certificate.

The new act is expected to add $500,000 to Kentucky road revenues by July 1.

New Single Sleeve Valve Engines



Cutaway front section of an Argyle single sleeve valve engine, which the Continental Motors Corporation announces it will build for American automobiles. Tests are said to have proved that one of these Argyle engines, developing 30 horse-power at 3000 r. p. m., and installed in a car weighing 2000 pounds, would deliver 30 miles to the gallon of gasoline. Superchargers, oil rectifiers and filters, air cleaners and similar devices can be built into the Argyle engine without difficulty.

HAS AIR-DRIVEN AUTOMOBILE

F. E. Kennedy of Portland, Ore., claims to have perfected an air-driven automobile. Storage battery current runs a small electric motor to operate an air pump which keeps air pressure at a maximum in the tank. This compressed air, mixed with oil, enters two hydraulic cylinders, where it drives the pistons.

Rental Car Business Will Outstrip Taxis, Says Hertz

Elaborate Individual Transportation Service Between Chicago and St. Louis and New York Coming, He Declares.

John Hertz, taxicab and motor bus manufacturer and operator, predicts that the business of supplying automobiles to individual drivers at a certain fixed rental per mile will outstrip the taxicab business five to one in the next few years.

"The possibilities in this new system of individual transportation are almost unlimited," Hertz told a recent convention of rental car operators, held in Chicago. Hertz, by the way, is developing a countrywide "drive it yourself" plan.

"After less than a year of organization work, the rented and self-driven automobile is a recognized factor in our transportation scheme," Hertz declared.

"Within 60 to 90 days, I predict, it will be possible for a man to walk from his office in Chicago to one of the rental stations, take out a first-class car, drive it to St. Louis or New York, pay his nominal mileage charges to a rental depot at his destination, and proceed about his business with no more thought of transportation worries."

What's New in Motor Cars

Velie Adds Sedan Model

A new Velie sedan selling at $1450, factory, is announced by the Velie Motors Corporation, and the Benjamin Motor Co., local distributer. The new car is known as the model 60 sedan. It is finished in high luster lacquer in a three-tone color combination of gray contrasting with kingfisher blue in the belt panel, with moldings and striping to match. Fenders and running board aprons are in black enamel. The seats are low and deep cushioned, with upholstery of a cloth specially selected as to texture and color. Specially designed cushion and back springs add materially to the riding qualities. Standard equipment includes dome light, robe rail, foot rests, automatic windshield wiper and rear view mirror. As on the other Velie models, the light controls are on the steering wheel, and there are locking devices for each door, with a three-unit panel, which includes speedometer, ammeter, oil gauge and concealed light. Lockheed 4-wheel brakes and 32x6 balloon tires are also standard equipment. Under the hood is the new Velie-built vibrationless motor. The crankshaft is extra large and rigid.

Larger Peerless Six In De Luxe Styles

NEW de luxe body styles are being offered in the Peerless six-72 model. These include five and seven-passenger sedans of the larger six-cylinder Peerless. Colors available are Brewster light green, Ohio blue and Tudor gray. The interiors are unusually luxurious. The upholstery is of fine quality mohair velour. Walnut panels are inlaid in the doors. The instrument board is finished in walnut effect. The instruments are of special design and include an eight-day clock. In addition to the standard equipment of the regular six-72 sedans, that of the de luxe bodies includes bumpers and bumperettes and a winter-front finished in lacquer of the same color as on the car. The de luxe models are finished entirely in lacquer, including fenders, hood sills, dust and splash shields.

All-Weather Map of Missouri State Roads

PLANNING OF AUTO TRIPS SIMPLIFIED

New Chart Will Enable Motorist to Tell at Glance Where He Can Go Without Need to Worry About Rain.

The map printed herewith is the first practical chart of Missouri State highways that shows plainly and simply where a motorist can be sure of finding all-weather going. It deliberately avoids showing what is being done or what will be done on the State roads. It tells what is all-weather and where one would better expect trouble.

If one motors on the roads, or parts of roads, shown by heavy black lines, he need not worry about weather. If he plans to use roads, or parts of them, not shown in heavy black, he would better figure on difficulties or consult the Post-Dispatch Resort and Travel Bureau, or the Touring Department of the Automobile Club of Missouri. The map was prepared by George Drummond, head of the automobile club's touring department, and the automobile editor.

The heavy black lines on the map show State highways, or sections, that are concrete, asphalt, macadam, gravel or natural grave' so that an automobile can run over them during or after rain. Detours are not shown. Wherever there is a heavy black line, a detour if there be one, is all-weather. For example, the detour on Highway No. 14 through Pacific is not shown, but this can be traveled after rain.

Every State highway, or part of one, that is not shown by a heavy black line is dirt work, or under construction, or under contract.

A glance at the map will tell any motorist where he can go and be certain he can get through both ways no matter if it rains and where he may be bogged down in mud or may run into rough going because of construction.

If a trip he has in mind is over roads shown all black, he can go ahead without making inquiries If not, he would better visit the Post-Dispatch or Automobile Club of Missouri touring bureau.

It should be borne in mind tha' this map ignores hundreds of miles of road work that is under way or has been placed under contract. So it does not show the relative; large amount of State road work in progress north of the Missouri River.

Bus Trips From St. Louis

By JEAN CAMERON.

Every year at this time there seems to be an almost universal longing among city dwellers to get into the country, where every budding, growing thing gives assurance that winter is really over. The lucky car owner has been able to gratify this craving almost at will, but the less fortunate family with no car heretofore has found itself shut in, indeed. This season, however, the bus lines radiating in all directions, give the would-be country seeker many of the advantages of the car owner.

One of the interesting all-day bus trips from St. Louis is on the line to St. Genevieve and Perryville. The bus leaves the Marquette Hotel daily at 7 a. m., reaches Perryville after 11, starts back at 2:30, and arrives in St. Louis about 6:45, thus giving passengers who wish to take only a done-day trip ample time for picnicking, visiting, sightseeing or business at any of the towns en route.

Fine Views, Interesting Sights.

The bus goes out the Lemay Ferry road, where every ridge surmounted affords increasingly alluring views of the country ahead. Almost before one knows it, the Meramec River is crossed, with its brief but always lovely view upstream, where every tree and shrub along shore is reflected in the water.

Among the older settlements passed is Kimmswick, laid out in 1858 by Theodore Kimm, and Pevely, laid out in 1860. Just outside Pevely, an uncompleted bridge necessitates a mile detour to the right on a gravel road.

One of the loveliest Mississippi River views hereabouts is to be had when the bus tops the rise just outside Herculaneum. This city, laid out in 1808 and the first county seat of Jefferson County, has much to interest one. It was the great lead shipping town of the county for many years, and had the only postoffice in the county until 1837. In early years shot towers were erected on the precipitous bluffs above the river; the ruins of one can still be seen, also a part of the chimney of the house where Gov. Fletcher was born. The visitor will find many lovely views from the bluffs, while the plant of the St. Joseph Lead Co. is one of the largest of its kind in the world.

The "Twin Cities."

The next regular bus stop is at the "Twin Cities" of Festus and Crystal City. Crystal City was first entered in 1834 by an Eastern company seeking mineral wealth, but nothing definite was done with its sand until a visit in 1868 by expert English glass makers. In 1871, the first successful attempt to use the sand was made by a Michigan firm, which named the place New Detroit. Its workmen, however, persisted in calling it Crystal City. So insistent were they on this, that the organizers were obliged to yield and rechristen it according to the whim of the workmen.

In 1873 Festus was platted, and for a while was called Adams' Addition, then Derby City, then colloquially referred to as "Tanglefoot" until the citizens became so indignant at the supposed slur on their nightly condition that they renamed it Festus.

Attractive Countryside.

About a mile below Crystal City, the bus leaves the concrete of State highway No. 9-25, and swings left onto the gravel of route No. 25. From there on the country becomes more rolling, and conditions more primitive. Old log cabins appear frequently, some of them abandoned, many improved and modernized, but still in use. Old-time rail fences, clapboard fences (the clapboards or pickets, hand split by the early settlers) and beautifully built stone walls appear. The road mostly follows the ridges, here and there dipping down to cross streams, among them Plattin and Establishment creeks, both bridged. Cedar, walnut, cottonwood, willow, gum trees and oaks are everywhere. There are literally hundreds of places where one longs to camp or picnic.

At Bloomsdale, route 25 swings left and a mile south a stretch of about eight miles of narrow gravel is traversed, about four miles in the middle of the stretch being narrow enough to necessitate some care in passing vehicles in very wet weather. About six miles beforc reaching Ste. Genevieve, the road again divides, No. 25 turning right. The road to the left is graveled two miles shorter, and called prettier, but has three fords. Next comes the little town of Zell, and four miles from Ste. Genlevieve, route 25 and route No. 68 intersect. Just beyond the junction is the station of Marlo, with its abandoned marble quarry, then Mosher with its lime quarries and kilns.

Ste. Genevieve and Perryville.

The bus reaches Ste. Genevieve at 10 o'clock. Here is a town to delight the seeker after places of historic interest. The oldest permanent settlement in the State, old Ste. Genevieve, built on the river bank south of the present location, was founded about 1732. It was subject to overflow, so the settlers soon removed to the higher ground of the present site. A number of houses still to be seen were built in 1782, 1784 and 1790.

Leaving Ste. Genevieve, the bus follows a road between rich bottom lands and limestone bluffs, which are said to be the original river banks. Several miles below Ste. Genevieve, in the bottoms to left, are a group of Indian mounds, like those in the Cahokia region. The largest is perhaps 30 feet high and 150 by 100 feet in diameter. About five miles beyond Ste. Genevieve the Aux Vases is crossed, with a long, steep grade on either side. Just beyond this river are pits where it is said stone for Eads Bridge was quarried.

When within three miles of St. Mary's, the bus turns off on a nine-mile detour—five and one-half miles of gravel, one and one-half miles of dirt, and two miles more of gravel, with a few hundred yards of dirt just as the detour ends. This is said to be an all-weather road, save for a ford of the little Saline, sometimes bad for a short time after heavy rain. The Big Saline, crossed by bridge, is a tempting stream for camper, picnicer and fisherman.

The bus reaches Perryville shortly after 11 o'clock. Here is the county seat of Perry County, named in honor of the naval hero of the War of 1812. St. Mary's Seminary, just outside the city limits, was founded in 1818, near where a group of Catholic families settled and erected a log church in 1799. Perryville was laid out in 1822. One of its landmarks is a two-story brick house on the north side of the square. It has an ornamental wrought iron railing around the second floor balcony, and dates back to 1847.

Comfortable Busses.

At 2:30, the bus starts on its return trip.

The Prost company, which operates this bus line, has been operating in Perry and Cape Girardeau Counties for nearly 10 years. Jan. 29, 1925, the St. Louis-Perryville service began with a round trip daily in both directions. Since then, in spite of rain, snow, bad roads, new road construction, and detours that have stalled hundreds of private cars, this service has been maintained. Not a trip has been missed, and most of the time trips have been made on scheduled time.

Reo busses, with a maximum capacity of 24 passengers, are used, with a supplementary passenger car service when traffic becomes extra heavy. The busses have heaters for cold days, and the wide Pullman windows furnish sunshine, perfect views, and, in warm weather, plenty of air. The leather upholstery, deep, soft cushions, and dual springs furnish the ease and comfort of a private car. The drivers are careful and experienced in all kinds of weather and road conditions. Bus fares are predicated on distance covered, about 3 cents a mile on a round trip basis.

SCENIC ILLINOIS HIGHWAY TO BE PAVED THIS YEAR

Route No. 80, From Rock Island North to Wisconsin Line, Will Traverse Rugged Region Along River.

By the Associated Press.

ROCK ISLAND, Ill., March 20.—Canyons, hills and other scenery will be opened to motorists when "Route 80," which runs from this city to the Wisconsin line, becomes a hard road. Gov. Small has promised to build the route out of the $100,000,000 bond issue funds this summer.

The road will pass through one of the prettiest parts of Illinois. It winds up and down over hills, skirts the base of bluffs for miles, meanders along the lowlands adjoining the river and threads canyons that will amaze those who look upon Illinois merely as a "plains" state.

Route 80 will be reached at Rock Island from St. Louis over Illinois route 3 from the St. Louis Free Bridge via Alton, Jacksonville and Rushville; over Illinois No. 4 to Springfield, No. 24 to Peoria, No. 29 to De Pue and No. 7, or over Missouri highway No. 9 via Hannibal to Keokuk and then the Mississippi River Scenic Highway through Iowa.

One of the picturesque spots on the highway is the Savannah headlands. Palisades of rock rear themselves in fantastic shapes. Dense forests and foliage line the road, and on one side is the Mississippi River. Near the headlands, in the river, which is still blue at this point, are the "Thousand Islands," which can be seen from certain points on the road.

Nearer the Wisconsin line is a large triangle of territory which is bold of outline and even mountainous in places. It is here that lead and zinc miners have dug the metals out of the earth since 1728, and where the historic town of Galena lies, with traditions older than some parts of New England.

The highway leads tourists near the old Block House mentioned in Illinois history, the old shot tower where round lead bullets were made by dropping molten lead from its top to a container of water at the bottom. Here also is Grants' memorial home, which is in charge of a caretaker who conducts visitors through the house, which has been preserved inside and outside just as the Grant family left it.

A little further is Apple River canyon, which, if plans now pending go through, will become a state park. This district, wild and rugged, has a wide range of flora and fauna. Much of Route 80 will be through the district which has been set aside by the Federal Government as a bird and animal reserve.

BRITISH 91-INCH RACER HAS 6-CYLINDER MOTOR

Engine Designed to Run Up to 7000 R.P.M. and Develop 100 Horse Power.

With bore of 2.18 inches and stroke of 3.46 inches, a new British A. C. racing car with six-cylinder, 91-cubic inch engine, has interesting features.

Cylinders are of cast iron pressed into aluminum alloy water jackets. Crankshaft bearings are ball and roller type, while connecting rods bearings are roller.

Pistons are domed so that their tops are almost perfect hemispheres, and there are only two thin rings to a piston. Pistons are thick, to help dissipate heat.

Two inclined valves per cylinder have hollowed-out heads, so as not to break the walls of the hemisperical combustion head made of aluminum alloy, in which are set hardened steel valve seats. There are two overhead camshafts, driven by silent chain. There are four roller bearings per camshaft. Two distributers are driven by the offside camshaft.

A Rootes supercharger is fitted. The engine is designed to run up to 7000 r. p. m. and to develop 100-horsepower.

FIRST CAR INTO COLOMBIAN CITY EXHIBITED AT CHURCH

The first automobile ever seen in Giron, near Bucaramanga, Colombia, climbed over mountains, through brush, over ridges and through swift-flowing rivers. A public holiday was declared on the day of its arrival.

When it had made its last dash through the rapids of the Rio de Oro, "The River of Gold," and had pulled swiftly up into the heart of the city, it was taken to the courtyard of the principal church. There the padre used the Studebaker big six as an object lesson for a sermon, pointing to it as the generous gift of a kindly Providence, rewarding civilization's effort to advance.

PIONEER CAR IMPROVEMENTS IN 1908 FORD CAR RECALLED

A Ford car catalog of 1908, illustrates the infant stage of the world's motor greatest industry, and furnishes interesting comparisons with a number of features of automotive engineering often cited as new developments.

Back in 1908, the question of on which side the car should be controlled was regarded as of little importance. Henry Ford, however, recognized the fact that when automobiles became as popular as he intended to make them, safety in traffic would be greatly increased by the left hand drive. So, with the advent of the Model T, Ford pioneered the move to popularize this type of control. As the number of automobiles increased, other manufacturers followed his precedent until within a few years virtually every car made in America was left-hand drive.

To torque tube drive, now a feature of many of the finest American and European automobiles, was applied to the first Ford Model T in 1908. Three-point engine suspension, now universally recognized, made its first appearance on a Ford car in 1903 and was included in the specifications of the Model T.

The multiple disc clutch is frequently quoted as a "new improvement," yet a multiple disc clutch constantly bathed in oil was one of the features of the 1908 Model T.

ROW OVER WEAF ANNOUNCERS

A great controversy has raged for some weeks past in a New Jersey household, according to a letter received by WEAF. It all started over the announcing of WEAF causing disagreements among members of the family as to who was announcing. One member of the family would insist with positiveness that it was Graham McNamee. Another was equally certain that it was Phillips Carlin. The third, and the youngest, argued that it could be none other than James Haupt. In order to preserve the peace in this and various other homes WEAF has sent an announcing schedule which is adhered to.

Forty thousand people are directly employed in the radio industry in England. The annual business turnover amounts to $50,000,000.

LICENSE APPLICANTS MAY GO TO COURT

WASHINGTON, March 20.—Whether Congress adopts radio legislation at its present session or not—and the chances are running high that the issue will be sidetracked in the Senate—there is little likelihood that the Department of Commerce will alter its policy of refusing broadcasting licenses to all applicants for at least another year.

Both Secretary of Commerce Hoover and the officials of the radio section of the department, are standing pat on the declaration that there is no more room in the ether.

The petitioners for wave lengths at present number 425 and at the rate in which they have increased during the past three months, their total in another year would be approximately 1000 or almost twice the number of broadcasters now operating in the United States.

Without concrete legislation definitely authorizing the refusal of licenses unless such issuances would be in the interests of public service it is admitted that the department's stand may become the target for considerable criticism from these disgruntled applicants and the policy may be attacked in the United States courts.

Denial of a broadcasting permit to the American Federation of Labor, in Chicago, already has brought charges of discrimination, despite the explanation of Judge Stephen B. Davis, solicitor of the department, that 20 applications from Chicago submitted prior to that of the labor body, already had been disapproved because of the existent congestion in the ether.

Other unhappy would-be broadcasters are known to be planning an offensive against the department's attitude in the event that Congress adjourns without granting the authority contained in the proposed radio bills and the department continues its policy on the authority assumed last fall, following the fourth annual radio conference.

CAPITOL THEATER FAMILY THROUGH KSD TONIGHT

THE CAPITOL THEATER family of New York will again be a regular feature of the Sunday night chain programs through KSD, the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, beginning tonight at 6:15. Resumption of this fine radio feature follows the closing of the series of concerts by the St. Louis Post-Dispatch Orchestra, Max Steindel conductor, which delighted KSD listeners for a period of 14 weeks.

The first part of the Capitol program is the broadcasting of the music and specialties direct from the big New York picture house. This is followed by solos and instrumental numbers from the Capitol Theater studio, the entire entertainment lasting two hours. This is followed by the Atwater Kent Radio Hour, also broadcast each Sunday night by KSD.

Tonight's Atwater Kent Soloist

Claudia Muzio, noted Italian soprano and prima donna of the Chicago Civic Opera Co., and Alexander Brailowsky, the gifted Russian pianist, will broadcast from Station WEAF, New York, tonight, under the auspices of A. Atwater Kent, of Philadelphia, through KSD and 14 other stations.

Mme. Muzio is the grand niece of Felicita Gavirato, for many years the opera idol of Italy. Her mother was a singer of note while her father, also a musician, was on the staff of the Covent Garden Theater, London, and later with the Metropolitan Opera House, New York.

Because of her father's connections, she heard the best music from babyhood and was a veritable child of the opera. When she was 16 years of age, she was forbidden to sing by her father who feared injury to her voice. Then she was sent to Italy to study with famous teachers. She made her debut in Milan, Italy, and sang later at Covent Garden, London. Her successs resulted in her engagement by the Metropolitan Opera and her later connection with the Chicago Civic Opera Co. She has concertized in Europe and throughout the United States.

Alexander Brailowsky is a native of Kiev, Russia, where his father was a musician and the proprietor of a music store. In 1911, the family moved to Vienna in order that young Brailowsky might study with the great Leschetizky, following his work at the conservatory in Kiev. At the outbreak of the war, the family fled to Switzerland, later removing to Paris where Brailowsky has given in all 26 recitals, as well as numerous concerts in other European and South American capitals. He first played in New York in November, 1924, followed by three other recitals in quick succession. While only 27 years of age, he is ranked by critics as among the world's greatest pianists. The joint program for Sunday night, starting at 9:15 p. m., Eastern time, follows:

Aria: "Ritorna Vincitor" from Aida ..... Verdi
Mme. Muzio.
Nocturne in D flat Major...Chopin
Etude in F flat Major (Butterfly) ..... Chopin

Radio on Gondolas.

It is reported from Venice that radio amateurs there have hit on a particularly bright idea to attract tourists to their particular crafts. Many of them, fortunate possessors of gondolas, have fitted them up with receiving sets, and go floating along the canals of a moonlit night. The effect is surprisingly romantic when turning a corner in a silently gliding gondola to hear from the next canal, wafted on the night air, some dreamy love melody from the Vienna or Italian station.

HOW AURORA BOREALIS AFFECTS ATMOSPHERE

Radio Corporation Finds It Clears Air of Background Noises and Helps Reception.

Radio experts are not all in accord as to whether the recent unusual interference encountered by many broadcast listeners this winter was due to the aurora borealis. Some believe that, indirectly at least, the Northern lights were responsible; others point out that their observations showed no relation between the aurora and the so-called "blanketing."

Engineers of the Radio Corporation now point out that the effect of the aurora did not interfere seriously in the handling of commercial traffic, but, on the contrary, seemed to improve reception conditions by reducing the objectionable radio background and creating what they term a "silent" atmosphere.

Scientific opinion as to just what may be the exact cause of the aurora borealis is divided. The beautiful and spectacular display of scintilating and variegated "Northern lights" is by no means rare in the northernmost countries, particularly in Scandinavia, and has on occasion been observed as far south as New York City. However, while the visible effects of the aurora borealis may be limited to a relatively small portion of the earth's population, its electrical and magnetic effects are felt more or less over a large part of the world, in a degree corresponding with the magnitude of the phenomenon itself.

The last vivid display of the aurora borealis took place on Jan. 26, when its effects were felt far and wide, especially in wire and radio communication. Early in the morning of that day the operators of the Radio Corporation of America's receiving station at Belfast, Me., reported an apparent "deadness" of the atmosphere. Being equipped with super-sensitive and super-selective receiving facilities for handling transoceanic traffic, the operators at that northern point are intimately familiar with the ever-changing conditions of the transatlantic ether.

According to the Belfast operators, the radio atmosphere that morning was singularly quiescent, in vivid contrast with the normal atmosphere and its animated background. There was absolute calm except for the signals which came through with good volume, although seemingly dull. Suspecting the cause to be an exceptional display of the aurora borealis, the American radio men queried the Norway transoceanic staff, who reported a brilliant spectacle in the northern sky.

Meanwhile, observations were made at the regular transoceanic receiving station at Riverhead, Long Island. Here the effect was far less noticeable than farther north at Belfast, probably due to the difference in latitude. If anything, there was an appreciable improvement in the incoming signals at Riverhead.

The most marked effect of the aurora borealis was noted in the operation of the RCA wire lines, of which there are some 4500 miles out of New York City, passing through the states of New York, New Jersey, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Massachusetts, Delaware, Maryland and the District of Columbia. The land lines are used to connect the various transoceanic and marine transmitting and receiving stations with the traffic offices, as well as to hook up the broadcasting stations of the RCA group. Considerable ground currents were noted on the wire lines, but the system at no time was in danger of interruption. The short-wave radio link between the Belfast station and the New York traffic office performed flawlessly all through the display.

For two days the aurora borealis held sway, with its far-reaching electrical and magnetic effects. At first the transoceanic radio signaling speed was reduced, but as the operators became more familiar with the altered state of the atmosphere, the radio circuits were brought up by easy stages to a speed of 80 to 90 words per minute. Conditions seemed to improve as the effect continued, once the operators made allowances for the unusual state of the ether.

It is the belief of the RCA engineers that the aurora borealis does not interfere seriously with radio waves nor the handling of radio traffic. If anything, it improves conditions to some extent by eliminating the characteristic radio background, although radio signals themselves likewise lose their customary sparkle or brilliancy. The aurora seems to have a marked alleviating affect on radio communication, the very strangeness of which causes a slight inconvenience at first until the operators have accustomed themselves to a "silent" atmosphere.

Record Span.

A young student, C. D. Alpert, attending the University of California Southern Branch, in Los Angeles, recently visited KFI for the first time. Alpert worked his way through the Orient on the S. S. Stockton. At a receiving point 500 miles off the coast of Japan, while listening to 5XX, Daventry, England, he tuned directly from that station to a KFI program, thus covering 18,000 miles of the earth's surface with a single turn of the dials.

Total Shielding

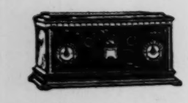
permits power for Tone Quality

ALL sound reproducing apparatus such as cone speakers requires the vibration of a diaphragm. Obviously power is required to vibrate this diaphragm.

The more power you have, and the better the control of the power—the more accurate will be the sound reproduction.

The dream of radio engineers always has been to build a Receiver capable of delivering to a sound-producing apparatus a maximum of accurately controlled power. This is realized in the Stromberg-Carlson Receiver—by the total shielding of each radio frequency circuit.

Total shielding permits the use of a third stage of radio frequency amplification. So advantageous is this third stage that weak signals barely heard on a 5-tube receiver are further amplified approximately 8 times. The result is properly controlled power for full cone speaker volume with a startling accuracy of tone.



No. 601 Receiver, treasure chest type, 6-tube; totally shielded; dual control; operates horn or cone type Loud Speaker. Equipped with voltmeter; Solid Mahogany. $210 without accessories.

ELECTROCUTION AT CKAC

The smell of burning flesh and a charred body lying across several wires gave route evidence as to the cause of the short-circuiting of the entire system of Station CKAC, La Presse, here, recently. The electrocution put the station out of commission and brought a loss of approximately $5000, besides the inconvenience and embarrassment of having the program stopped. Every one of the 14 rectifying, oscillating and modulating tubes, were destroyed.

The body was burned beyond identification and no mourners of the dead victim were located as it happened to be just an ordinary little brown mouse.

Dutch Using Short Waves.

It was recently announced by the Dutch Ministry for the colonies that special short-wave experiments were being carried out under the auspices of that department, with a view to establishing regular communication with the Government stations in the Dutch East Indies. The station operated by the Colonial Office, call signal PCUC, is working with a 42-meter wave. The Postoffice station, PCMM, is also co-operating, the latter using a wave length of 25 meters.

WHAT FARMER LIKES WHEN HE LISTENS I

Thinks Music Is Incidental Though He Prefers to Hear the Chain-Programs.

In spite of the reputed universal appeal of broadcasting as a medium of entertainment, the radio tastes of Western farmers are widely different from those of city people. Whereas the majority of urbanites overwhelmingly prefer music in one form ar another, to speeches or lectures, the majority of agriculturists are inclined to disregard melody and tune in on educational features, weather forecasts and particularly market quotations. This is the conclusion voiced by Kenyon W. Mix, Western district manager for the Sleeper Radio Corporation, who has just returned after an extensive study of the great farming districts of the Central and North Central West.

Music, states Mr. Mix, is what the farmer turns to only after he has obtained from his set more valuable and important items like market prices of farm products. He works late and goes to bed early, so when he does listen in he selects something of material and immediate interest, like the price quotations, weather forecasts and bits of practical farming advice; music is entirely incidental to him.

"The experience of a popular broadcasting station in the West bears out this observation," says Mr. Mix. "The management mailed out statements to more than 18,000 farmers saying that the station would find it necessary to subdivide its time and requesting that listeners voice their preferences in program material. Fully 75 per cent of the farmers replied, in effect 'Cut out the music and give us the educational features and market quotations. We must educate our children and we must know what our products are worth.'

"The city man listens with mild amusement to an announcer's recitation of a long list of prices on hogs, corn, wheat, butter, eggs, cream and potatoes, but the farmer listens with deep concern, for it affects his personal welfare. This was brought home to me when I personally witnessed the following incidents:

"A hog buyer from Kansas City visited a farmer at 9 o'clock one morning and offered him a certain price for a quantity of his hogs. The farmer and his wife demurred, complaining that the figure was too low. The buyer excused himself and rode ofw to another farm.

"Two hours later the farmer tuned his radio set and caught the 11 o'clock market quotations. The broadcast price for hogs was below the one offered by the departed buyer, so the farmer did some quick thinking. He knew the man was at another house a few miles up the road, so he called up by telephone, got in touch with him and after saying that he needed some money and had decided to sell at the quoted terms, he closed a profitable deal. The buyer did not know of the sudden price change and was held to his original quotation by the ethics of the business.

"In another case I met a farmer who had for a neighbor a man he intensely disliked. The first farmer had a radio and the neighbor didn't. One day, while the farmer was listening to his receiver, he learned that the price of cabbages had gone up to $20 a ton. Thereupon he went out, bought from his neighbor all the latter's available cabbage, at the old and lower price, of course, and then resold at a healthy profit. The other man now has a radio receiver in his living room.

"I could recount hundreds of instances in which radio has afforded farmers direct benefits in the form of hard cash. They have learned the value of accurate price and weather information, and they look forward to broadcasts of this nature. Music is just music, and unless it comes from New York or some other big city through a network station they care little for it."

Here the effect was far less noticeable than farther north at Belfast, probably due to the difference in latitude. If anything, there was an appreciable improvement in the incoming signal at Riverhead.

The most marked effect of the aurora borealis was noted in the operation of the RCA wire lines, of which there are some 4500 miles, out of New York City, passing through the states of New York, New Jersey, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Massachusetts, Delaware, Maryland and the District of Columbia. The land lines are used to connect the various transoceanic and marine transmitting and receiving stations with the traffic offices, as well as to hook up the broadcasting stations of the RCA group. Considerable ground currents were noted on the wire lines, but the system at no time was in danger of interruption. The short-wave radio link between the Belfast station and the New York traffic office performed flawlessly all through the display.

For two days the aurora borealis held sway, with its far-reaching electrical and magnetic effects. At first the transoceanic radio signaling speed was reduced, but as the operators became more familiar with the altered state of the atmosphere, the radio circuits were brought up by easy stages to a speed of 80 to 90 words per minute. Conditions seemed to improve as the effect continued, once the operators made allowances for the unusual state of the ether.

It is the belief of the RCA engineers that the aurora borealis does not interfere seriously with radio waves nor the handling of radio traffic. If anything, it improves conditions to some extent by eliminating the characteristic radio background, although the signals themselves likewise lose their customary sparkle or brilliancy. The aurora seems to have a marked alleviating affect on radio communicatfon, the very strangeness of which causes a slight inconvenience at first until the operators have accustomed themselves to a "silent" atmosphere.

Record Span.

A young student, C. D. Alpert, attending the University of California Southern Branch, in Los Angeles, recently visited KFI for the first time. Alpert worked his way through the Orient on the S. S. Stockton. At a receiving set 500 miles off the coast of Japan, while listening to 5XX, Daventry, England, he tuned directly from that station to a KFI program, thus covering 18,000 miles of the earth's surface with a single turn of the dials.

WHAT FARMER LIKES WHEN HE LISTENS IN

Thinks Music Is Incidental, Though He Prefers to Hear the Chain Programs.

In spite of the reputed universal appeal of broadcasting as a medium of entertainment, the radio tastes of Western farmers are widely different from those of city people. Whereas the majority of urbanites overwhelmingly prefer music in one form ar another, to speeches or lectures, the majority of agriculturists are inclined to disregard melody and tune in on educational features, weather forecasts and particularly market quotations. This is the conclusion voiced by Kenyon W. Mix, Western district manager for the Sleeper Radio Corporation, who has just returned after an extensive study of the great farming districts of the Central and North Central West.

Music, states Mr. Mix, is what the farmer turns to only after he has obtained from his set more valuable and important items like market prices of farm products. He works late and goes to bed early, so when he does listen in he selects something of material and immediate interest, like the price quotations, weather forecasts and bits of practical farming advice; music is entirely incidental to him.

"The experience of a popular broadcasting station in the West bears out this observation," says Mr. Mix. "The management mailed out statements to more than 18,000 farmers saying that the station would find it necessary to subdivide its time and requesting that listeners voice their preferences in program material. Fully 75 per cent of the farmers replied, in effect: 'Cut out the music and give us the educational features and market quotations. We must educate our children and we must know what our products are worth.'

"The city man listens with mild amusement to an announcer's recitation of a long list of prices on hogs, corn, wheat, butter, eggs, cream and potatoes, but the farmer listens with deep concern, for it affects his personal welfare. This was brought home to me when I personally witnessed the following incidents:

"A hog buyer from Kansas City visited a farmer at 9 o'clock one morning and offered him a certain price for a quantity of his hogs. The farmer and his wife demurred, complaining that the figure was too low. The buyer excused himself and rode ofw to another farm.

"Two hours later the farmer tuned his radio set and caught the 11 o'clock market quotations. The broadcast price for hogs was below the one offered by the departed buyer, so the farmer did some quick thinking. He knew the man was at another house a few miles up the road, so he called up by telephone, got in touch with him and after saying that he needed some money and had decided to sell at the quoted terms, he closed profitable deal. The buyer did not know of the sudden price change and was held to his original quotation by the ethics of the business.

"In another case I met a farmer who had for a neighbor a man he intensely disliked. The first farmer had a radio and the neighbor didn't. One day, while the farmer was listening to his receiver, He learned that the price of cabbages had gone up to $20 a ton. Thereupon he went out, bought from his neighbor all the latter's available cabbage, at the old and lower price, of course, and then resold at a healthy profit. The other man now has a radio receiver in his living room.

"I could recount hundreds of instances in which radio has afforded farmers direct benefits in the form of hard cash. They have learned the value of accurate price and weather information, and they look forward to broadcasts of this nature. Music is just music, and unless it comes from New York or some other big city through a network station they care little for it."

ELECTROCUTION AT CKAC

The smell of burning flesh and a charred body lying across several wires gave mute evidence as to the cause of the short-circuiting of the entire system of Station CKAC, La Presse, here, recently. The electrocution put the station out of commission and brought a loss of approximately $5000, besides the inconvenience and embarrassment of having the program stopped. Every one of the 14 rectifying, oscillating and modulating tubes, were destroyed.

The body was burned beyond identification and no mourners of the dead victim were located as it happened to be just an ordinary little brown mouse.

Dutch Using Short Waves.

It was recently announced by the Dutch Ministry for the colonies that special short-wave experiments were being carried out under the auspices of that department, with a view to establishing regular communication with the Government stations in the Dutch East Indies. The station operated by the Colonial Office, call signal PCUU, is working with a 42-meter wave. The Postoffice station, PCMM, is also co-operating, the latter using a wave length of 25 meters.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

The Post-Dispatch Radio Department cannot undertake to answer questions by mail.

Q. I have a Freshman Model 5F4 and would like to know why it is necessary to use more amplification on station KSD, rated at 500 watts, than on WIL, rated at 250 watts?—J. B.

A. For two reasons. In the first place the power rating of a station does not mean much when it comes to a question of the amount of volume with which it will be received. A station using 500 watts will not be heard five times as loud as a station using 100 watts nor will a station using 5000 watts be heard 10 times as loud as a station using 500 watts. Take for example KOA at Denver, a 5000-watt station, and WSMB at New Orleans a 500-watt station. Both stations are about equal distances from St. Louis and yet WSMB is consistently heard here louder and oftener thanKOA. The second reason is that sets of the Freshman type give more amplification on the wave lengths below 350 meters than they do on the wave lengths above 350 meters due to regeneration which takes place in the set when tuned to the shorter wave lengths.

Q. I have an Atwater Kent Model 20 receiver and am now using two 45-volt units of B battery. Would the addition of another 45-volt unit increase the distance that I would be able to receive on my set? I receive Mexican and Cuban stations but can't bring them in strong enough to understand. How can I remedy this?—E. H.

A. The addition of another B battery would not increase the distance-getting ability of your set. By using the UX112 power tubes in the two audio stages with an increase in both B and C battery you will get better and louder reception on the stations that you are now hearing, but it will not help you any in picking up stations that you do not hear at the present time.

Q. I am now using No. 14 wire in both my aerial and lead-in. If I change the wire in my aerial to No. 10 wire would I also have to change the wire in the lead-in to No. 10 wire to get best results? MART.

A. No, you will not get any better results by changing the size of the lead-in wire.

Q. How old does one have to be before he can obtain an amateur transmitting license? M. T. S.

A. There are no age limitations in the requirements for obtaining an amateur transmitting license.

Q. The lead-in wire from my aerial almost touches the telephone wires and passes about 3 feet from the electric light wires leading to the house. Does this have any effect on the reception? W. H. D.

A. Unless you notice a steady humming or buzzing noise in your set, especially in rainy or damp weather, the wires are probably not interfering with your reception.

Q. Who was the first man who invented radio? Is he still living? Where and when was the first radio station erected?—M. L. C. B.

A. Radio as we know it is not the invention of any one man. It is the result of the labors of countless experimenters. Guglielmo Marconi is the person generally credited with the invention of radio. He was probably the first man to see the possibilities of the transmission of messages by use of the Hertzian waves. At least he was the first man who put his knowledge to work successfully. In 1896, he erected a transmitting station at Griffone, Italy and succeeded in sending messages a short distance. Marconi is still living and is still very active in radio research work.

Q. Publish hookup of short wave transmitter with list of parts and cost.—E. R.

A. A hookup of a short wave transmitter with list of parts appeared in the radio section of May 10, 1925. You can obtain a copy of this issue from the circulation department of the Post-Dispatch.

Q. Can I use an indoor aerial on a Atwater Kent Model 20 receiver and still get loud reception from the distant stations?—R. W.

A. The effectiveness of an indoor antenna depends upon where it is located. An indoor aerial may give good results in one house and give very poor results in another house in the same block. Usually however, an indoor antenna can be used successfully on most five tube sets, giving loudspeaker volume on the more powerful of the distant stations.

Q. I have a 4-tube Colin B. Kennedy receiver. When plugged in on first or second stage of amplification get good results but when plugged in on third stage am troubled with a loud hum. How can this be stopped—O. F. D.

A. The trouble you experience is probably due to the position of your loudspeaker when using three stages of amplification. Try moving the loudspeaker around until the howling stops, also change the tube in the last stage.

Q. I have a five-tube neutrodyne (home built) and have logged 36 stations, but during the last three weeks have only been able to hear five or six stations. My batteries are all fully charged. Can it be that a audio transformer is burned out? If so how can I test the transformer?—E. A.

A. The condition of poor reception that you report has been general for this section of the country, but in the last week reception has improved. It may be that one or more of your tubes have gone bad. Even though the filaments light it is not a sign that they are working properly. Have them tested. The audio transformer can be tested by placing a dry cell and head phones, which will indicate an open circuit. The secondary of the transformer is tested in the same way.

Q. What is the filament current and and voltage for the UX120 and UX210 tubes?—J. M.

A. The UX120 draws .125 amperes at a voltage of 3 volts and the UX210 draws 1.25 amperes at 7.5 volts.

Q. How does the chain program from WEAF reach St. Louis, by wire or air?—E. J. G.

A. The WEAF chain programs are all relayed here over long-distance land lines. The programs on the WJZ chain are relayed by short-wave radio transmission.

Q. I have a five-tube set that lightning ran in on and since that time the set does not work. The tubes burn O K and the batteries are fully charged, etc. What can I do to make it work?—J. P. G.

A. All sorts of queries are received here but this is the first one received asking how to fix a set that lightning ran in on. From the information given in the rest of your letter I would suggest that you take or mail your set to some reliable radio dealer and let him repair it.

Q. Can the Beacon radio B battery be recharged?—J. T.

A. The only Beacon B battery that I know of is a dry cell battery and it cannot be recharged.

Eight tubes mean five separate tuning circuits—for the very last word in sensitivity—and selectivity. But they are matched in Radiola 28 with greatest accuracy, and they all tune with a single control. This is the utmost of performance, with the utmost of simplicity.

Radiola 28 not only has the tone quality for which the Super-Heterodyne is famous. Because it uses the new power tube, it gets great volume on dry batteries—without distortion; gives you clear, true tone quality whether you like the music loud or soft.

WEEK OF FEATURES FROM STATION KSD

Capitol Theater Program Resumed and a New Chain Attraction for Thursday Night Offering.

The resumption of the Capitol Theater program from New York on Sunday evening, and the introduction in the New York program of another feature at 7:30 on Thursday evening are the outstanding novelties of the week in the broadcasting schedule at Station KSD. Artistically, the leading local events will be a double piano recital given by two St. Louis artists, David Earle and R. Emmet Murphy, in which the Beethoven Concerto No. 3 and the Concert Piece by Weber, will be presented in their entirety. In the "Atwater Kent Radio Hour tonight Claudia Muzio, soprano, and Alexander Brailowsky, pianist, will be joint artists. A song recital by Gilbert Borresen, tenor, which will take place Monday evening, preceding the piano recital by David Earle and R. E. Murphy, also will be of much interest, as will the "Commerce Hour" program on Friday night given by Margherita Donati-Burgin, Swiss violinist.

The Wednesday Club of St. Louis has arranged a program for the "Women's Hour" Thursday which will be in charge of Miss Eleanor Horton, and which will include a piano group by Katherine Carmichael, some child philosophy in song, story and verse by Bessie Bown Ricker, and other interesting features. This program will conclude the series of "Women's Hours" given this season by the Wednesday Club and is expected to be of exceptional interest.

The remainder of the week's schedule will be programs brought by land wire from WEAF New York and broadcast through KSD, except that on Saturday evening the stage program and special music at the Grand Central Theater in St. Louis will be broadcast as usual and a portion of the Hotel Statler concert orchestra's dinner program will be broadcast from Hotel Statler on Wednesday evening.

"WHAT YOU BUY FROM US IS GOOD"

Oh, Boy; What a Set!

WASHINGTON, March 20.—If you are not entirely satisfied with your radio set, it may be a good idea to communicate with Congressman Arthur M. Free, at the House Office Building, at Washington, and find out how his son built his radio set. Mr. Free is from California. During the debate on the White radio bill, he said:

"Any boy can take, as my boy did, a bolt, a little wire, and a crystal, which costs a few cents, and make a radio set and he can listen in on any program anywhere in the United States. If he wants a little better set, he can take a little bit more wire, a few more nuts and bolts and get a tube, and he can make a tube set, paying $2.50 for the tube."

CANARIES BROADCAST BY WJZ

Many letters have been received recently at Station WJZ from members of the radio audience, complimenting that station on their beautiful broadcasting of the songs of canary birds. For a while these letters were answered by the staff of that station, informing the writers that they were in error in complimenting WJZ on this work, as they had never broadcast anything of that nature. Finally the mail on this subject became so heavy that an investigation was made and it was found that the listeners were right. Canary birds did broadcast regularly through WJZ. It seems that in the lobby of the Hotel Commoodre, where Bernhard Levitow's Ensemble plays through Station WJZ, there are placed several canaries. Their cages hang close to the microphones, which pick up the music of the ensemble and the announcer's voice. Of course, when the orchestra is playing, the notes of these feathered songsters is drowned out, but when the announcer is talking, the shrill notes come piping through beautifully.

KFRU, owned and operated by Stephens College of Columbia, Mo., is said to be the only broadcasting station operated by a girls' junior college.

RADIO BILL AUTHOR OUTLINES MEASURE

Suggests That the Broadcast Wave Length Band Be Extended Downward to 150 Meters.

By C. C. DILL,
United States Senator From Washington and Author of the Dill Radio Bill Now Pending in Congress.

Radio during the last two years has become a source of real public service. It has gradually passed beyond the experimental stage and reached the point where the people of this great country may rely on it for entertainment and instruction.

I do not mean that radio development has reached perfection. I gather from engineers and scientists with whom I have discussed the subject that much greater improvements may be expected in transmitting and receiving apparatus, and that we may also have radio vision within the near future.

It is with the thought of dedicating this great service to the permanent use of the people as a whole that Congress is attempting to frame legislation for its regulation. There seems to be no doubt that regulation is necessary and that a new radio law is needed immediately.

The question has arisen during our consideration of the bill as to whether the regulation of radio should be entrusted to the Secretary of Commerce or to any other one man. It is my belief that at the present stage of development the details of administration should remain with the Department of Commerce, but that a nonpartisan commission should be established now with authority to pass finally upon questions which may be referred to it by the Secretary of Commerce or anyone else. The decisions of this commission should, of course, be subject to review in the courts.

A highly important feature connected with the administration of the radio law is the number of stations required to serve the American public. Due to the service area limitation imposed upon broadcasting stations by weather conditions and other forms of interference, it would seem as though a large number of stations would be necessary.

Under the present arrangement there are 89 wave lengths and 536 stations. There are applications on file at the Department of Commerce for 400 more new stations.

The crowding of 536 stations on 89 wave lengths has practically rendered unserviceable a large portion of the broadcasting band. I am by no means an expert on radio, but I am a fan with the average appreciation of programs and with the average desire to pick up a wide variety of stations.

The broadcasting band is divided into two sections. From 545 to 280 meters is given to class B, or the higher grade of stations. From 280 to 200 meters are the class A stations. The class B section was crowded to capacity many months ago and a number of those stations were placed in the class A band.

From my experience with my set and from what I have been told, there are so many stations between 280 and 200 meters that it is difficult to get any of them without interference. Even in the class B band the separation is none too great and interference is sometimes experienced.

Because of the congestion in the class A band, it seems as though these valuable wave lengths are almost entirely lost to the public. This presents a grave problem to Congress. I think, however, it is a problem of administration and that legislation should be enacted to give some agency authority to correct this situation.

I think I know of a solution which although easy to put on paper, might be very difficult to work out.

Broadcasting stations should be divided into two classes, according to their power—national and local stations. The most rigid standards should be set up for the national stations and they should, when possible, be given wave lengths to permit their being heard by the public without interference.

An entirely new allocation of wave lengths should be made on this basis. A certain number of wave lengths should be reserved for national stations and a number for local stations. Because of the low power limitation which should be placed on local stations, it might be possible to put all of them on three or four wave lengths.

The present class A band should be reallocated and confined to a number of stations which could render service without interference. The stations in the class A band should be given the chance to qualify as either national or local stations, and wave-length assignments made to them accordingly.

An entirely new band of wave lengths should be opened up for broadcasting—the band between 150 and 200 meters, and in it should be placed some of the stations which are causing the congestion in the Class A band. The assignments of wave lengths should be on a basis which would recognize the right of every section of the country to have sufficient stations to provide good radio service.

RADIO IN THE ARCTICS

Radio equipment has come to be considered by Arctic expeditions these days, when communication with bases is required on polar dashes by the air route. Commander Byrd of the navy is equipping his ship and plane with the latest radium and short wave apparatus, for direct communication, relaying news to amateurs and experimenters tests. His ship, the S. S. Chantey will answer to the call KEGK, either spark of a special short-wave tube set. The airplane will be furnished with the latest 50-watt transset, operating on 61 and 44 meters for an estimated range of at least 1000 miles. A portable short-wave set will also be carried in the plane for use in the event of emergency landings.

The radio personnel of the expedition includes Chief Operator Lloyd K. Grenlis of Chicago and Operator George H. James of Manchester, N. H. The radio equipment has been selected by Malcolm F. Hanson, who disigned some of the apparatus.

Capt. Wilkins of the Detroit Arctic Expedition is also carrying considerable radio equipment, including a short-wave airplane transmitter designed by Mr. Hanson. The plane will use the call KDA in transmitting news to members of the North American Newspaper Alliance on 60 and 44 meters. The Amundsen-Ellsworth Polar Expedition, which plans to fly towards the pole from Spitzbergen is also radio equipped. The U. S. Weather Bureau, it is understood, will co-operate by transmitting weather bulletins to the polar fliers.

Journal Holds to WSB.

WSB, the 1000-watt radio station operated by the Atlanta Journal, has not been sold to the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation which operates WLS and other stations, according to a letter received yesterday from John S. Cohen, publisher of the Journal.

Two weeks ago, a dispatch from Washington, stating that the sale of the station was rumored, was printed on the radio page. Mr. Cohen wrote the Sears-Roebuck Foundation had negotiated arrangements for co-operation in their programs, but that no sale was contemplated.

STUDYING THE LAW ON RADIO CRIMES

Experts Trying to Apply Slander and Lottery Statutes to New Form of Communication

WASHINGTON, March 20.—Close study of state and federal laws to determine how far they extend to crimes and misdemeanors of the air is to be made by some of the legal talent of the Government this summer.

Following the widespread attention focused on cases of alleged radio slander and libel in the Middle West, come reports of alleged radio lotteries conducted by some of the best known broadcasting stations on the air.

Inquiries from radio supervisors to determine the status of radio lotteries have been received by Chief Supervisor W. D. Terrell, but in the absence of any official complaint the matter so far has not been turned over to the Department of Justice.

It is known, however, that chance has entered into many of the distributions of cash prizes by radio broadcasters. One of the forms of radio lotteries, explained here, is that in which the listener wires or writes the station in order that the communication may be placed in a receptacle from which "lucky letters" are drawn.

Whether the lottery laws of the country are applicable to the conduct of radio games of chance, has yet to be determined.

The laws pertaining to slander and libel, also, are expected to be thoroughly tested before the year is out. An attempt to amend the White Radio bill, so as to legislate against radio slander, failed when the measure was considered by the House of Representatives. It was explained at the time that state laws fully protected citizens from verbal attacks through the ether.

A similar amendment, however, is expected to be offered in the Senate should the Dill bill be reported out of committee before the end of the present session of Congress.

Meanwhile, the attempts to recover damages in a suit for alleged radio slander in an address broadcast from an Oklahoma station and the action taken by Chicago officials in causing the arrest of a radio announcer for alleged slander, will be watched with interest by officials of both the Department of Commerce and the Department of Justice.

Those Thrifty Scots.

There has been a gigantic roundup of unlicensed set owners in Aberdeen, Scotland. According to an authentic report, 600 summonses have been taken out against Aberdonians suspected of having radios without a license.

By the Associated Press.

BERLIN, March 20.—The century-old custom whereby the drum major of the palace guards heralded the exit or entrance of a member of the royal family by beating a roll on his drum has been revived by President Von Hindenburg. It was abolished seven years ago at the time of the revolution.

42 POLICEMEN IN SWIMMING CLASS OF RED CROSS HERE

Volunteer for Instruction in Life Saving Methods; Lessons Start Thursday.

Forty-two of the best swimmers of the St. Louis police force have volunteered for intensive instruction in American Red Cross life saving methods, and instruction will begin Thursday at 4 p. m. at the Soulard Municipal swimming pool, Seventh and Soulard streets. Instruction will be given by Fred Potthoff, director of the St. Louis chapter, Red Cross Life Saving Department.

The life saving class is part of the program of physical efficiency for the police force conducted by Henry Abeken, physical director of the department, and has been approved by Chief of Police Gerk and the Board of Police Commissioners.

Last summer more than 600 police officers took swimming lessons under St. Louis Chapter, Red Cross, regulations, and it is probable that additional classes will be arranged next summer. There also will be several classes for the general public as part of the St. Louis chapter's "Make the Water Safe" campaign for 1926.

Theater Installs Earphones.

By the Associated Press.

LONDON, March 20.—"Lorgnette" earphones, to enable deaf patrons to follow the play, have been installed by the Court Theater of London. Microphones connecting with the individual earphones are installed in the footlights, and experiments have shown that this arrangement amplifies spoken words and musical numbers sufficiently to enable many deaf persons to hear perfectly.

Vote to Keep the 85¢ Tax

The Alarm Bell for the Stay-at-Home Voter

The time for action has come. Your vote for the 85-cent school tax rate is what counts now. Many public problems have been defeated because of the stay-at-home voter who sits comfortably at home, confident that the proposition will carry anyhow, and does not go to the polls and vote.

There is no doubt where the people stand on this question. This spirit is expressed by the many organizations which have pledged their support. The important thing now is to get the ballots put into the ballot-box. One hundred thousand children in the St. Louis schools are depending upon you to make up your mind right now that you will go to the polls and vote next Tuesday—RAIN OR SHINE.

This is not an increase in taxes. You have been paying the 85-cent school tax for the last four years. But—here's the point: Under a State law we are required to vote each four years to maintain the present level.

Unless a majority of the voters approve the present 85-cent rate the school tax will automatically drop back to the old 60-cent rate, greatly reducing the school revenue. Our schools cannot be efficiently operated on less money.

Vote for the education of your son and your daughter—and your neighbors' sons and daughters. St. Louis' school standards must not be lowered. We are proud of the St. Louis school system—which is among the best in the nation. We must not take a step backward.

Your personal approval of the present 85-cent rate will fail of its purpose unless it is expressed by your vote. Your action next Tuesday may mean much to your children's later success in life. Regardless of weather conditions, will you go to the polls next Tuesday and put your vote in the ballot-box?

Times of "Old English" Not Days of Mere Milk and Water

John Galsworthy Has Almost Shattered the Meaning of the Word "Victorian" With His Play Which George Arliss Presented Here Last Week.

By HARRY R. BURKE.

THE Hearts of Oak of the Victorian time, as John Galsworthy discloses them in his "Old English" are as unbelievable to this generation as an Earl Carroll revue would have been shocking to the good old Queen herself. We—at least we who are pleased to call ourselves younger intellectuals—have created our own Victorian time, and maugre the facts, we will have it according to our formula. It must be Philistine and prudish, self-righteous and smug, it must wear jewelry of woven human hair and heavy golden watch-chains, it must seat itself upon horse-hair and scrolled walnut, it must surround itself with antimacassars and wax-wreaths under glass domes, it must fret and fume, and in a word be done up in the curl-papers of an ancient spinster. With lofty and scornful gesture we fling at it the epithet—"Victorian!"

To rob us of so colorful an adjective is rather like taking from a child the doll it has made of a rag and a clothespin. Mr. Galsworthy is striking at an adjective our English language needs. Out upon him, then, for bullying the younger generation as "Old English" bullies his creditors; robbing them of a gold that's not more dear than is this word to many of our generation. Yet the fact remains that Galsworthy, genuine artist, has painted his genre picture by understatement. One shrinks with horror from the possibilities had he disclosed all that he knew before the ladies of the College Club the other evening.

THERE are father and son who in two generations have spanned the era between George IV and George V. Of such generations is that of George Moore, whose father was born in 1808, and who, born in 1852, still lives. Somewhere in an essay Gilbert K. Chesterton sums up the Victorian era by saying "George Moore was regarded as advanced because he was as candid as Henry Fielding, while Henry Fielding was still regarded as antiquated because he was as realistic as George Moore." Moore should, then, know his Victorian times. Musing in "Vale," over his father, he says:

"'The gentlemen of 1830 all had Byronic adventures,' I said, and I fell to thinking of the illegitimate daughter that was born to him. My mother told my sister she had seen the lady; my father had pointed her out, saying: 'She is my daughter.' She married and died childless, an old woman . . . and it seems a pity and rather harsh that we should never have met, for it is quite probable that I might have liked her better than any of my legitimate relations. There can be no doubt we should have been great friends, and I fell to thinking of the charm of an illegitimate relation, especially a sister."

IN that musing might be the germ of Galsworthy's comedy, for George Moore's breeding, whatever his ancestry, was conventionally in the English tradition, touching in its most Irish aspects only that of the hard-riding hard-hunting Anglicized Irish of the Lever-Lover fiction.

We of the younger intelligensia, one fears—particularly as Moore in memory glorifies the English Light o' Loves of the '60s in a continuing chapter, saying that the photographs of two of them "were everywhere, in every album" and cataloguing half a dozen more—have reconstructed our Victorian era after the fashion of those Antisaloon League worthies who, because they are not thirsty, insist that no one in the whole wide world desires a drink—or gets it.

In candor the Victorian era was full of dynamics—and dynamite. It was the era of great industrial anarchs who rose above accustomed morality as they desired. And its dynamics took the form of an industrial revolution, while the dynamite of its thought fulminated in a counter-revolution—a revolt against the fast-coming and inevitable industrial regimentation of men.

"OLD ENGLISH" on his little island had seen the rise of the Yankee Clipper ships, and had seen their broad white sails in proud triumph over British workmanship. But he had also seen, and had survived, the triumph of British steam over Yankee sail. And there might have been a conceivably different story to record had not the vast energies of steam disclosed to us the possibilities of our own continent. The Yankee mind turned itself to railroads and factories more than to shipping. One need but recall names like those of Jim Fiske and Jay Gould or, in a later time, those of "Bet-you-a-million" Gates and Mark Hanna. They were men of the Victorian era. Hhey wore neither corkscrew curls nor ruffled pantalettes. On questions of morality the world will always be divided. And questions of morality alone divide such once dominant figures in our life from that of "Old English" as Galsworthy portrays him.

If the physical creative energy of the time in its broader aspects took on the form of industrial and commercial conquests, the artistic creative energy was not content with the Philistinism—Matthew Arnold's epithet—which we of the 1920's characterize as Victorian. Thackeray satirized snobbery. Dickens flayed hypocrisy. Matthew Arnold crusaded against respectability. George Borrow glorified the vagabond. George Eliot conformed in writing, and lived life as she would.

TENNYSON was solace to the good Queen. But Browning, for all his optimism, must have offered her cold comfort when in "Columbe's Birthday" he ventured to ask the question of his time: "When is a man strong, until he feels alone?" And of other singers there were many. Swinburne sang of Eros, Rosetti of his "Jenny," and Edward Fitzgerald resurrected good old Omar to celebrate the god of wine. Matthew Arnold in verse voiced the philosophy of "Old English," saying:

"Resolve to be thyself; and know that he Who finds himself loses his misery."

And there was Henley with his

Grand Opera Season to Start April 11

FORMATION of the Grand Opera Association of St. Louis, which will sponsor actively St. Louis grand opera seasons hitherto backed only by individual enterprise, was announced yesterday by Guy Golterman.

The new organization is designed to act as a foundation upon which plans for more pretentious opera seasons than those previously enjoyed by St. Louisans, can be laid. It is planned to use its organization strength in planning and promoting successful grand opera seasons during the winter at the Odeon.

Twenty-one of the 30 seats on the board of governors have already been filled and formation of the body will be completed during the coming week.

Those who have already sent in their acceptances are: former Mayor Henry W. Kiel, chairman; Mr. and Mrs. Edward A. Faust; Judge and Mrs. Daniel G. Taylor; Mr. and Mrs. Carl F. G. Meyer; Mr. and Mrs. W. Frank Carter; Mr. and Mrs. E. D. Nims; Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Mayfield; Mr. and Mrs. F. W. A. Vesper; Mr. and Mrs. W. Palmer Clarkson; Lynton T. Block; G. Giuseffi; Mrs. Newton R. Wilson and Mrs. H. H. Barton.

The first season to be given by the association will be San Carlo Opera Co. cycle which is to begin at the Odeon on April 11, with "La Traviata."

The association has secured the services of 10 chorus members and 12 ballet dancers of the Chicago Civic Opera Company whose season closed last week. They will augment the chorus and ballet of the San Carlo Company.

"La Traviata" will mark the first appearance here of Franco Tafuro, the youthful Italian tenor who is having his first American season. He will sing the role of Alfredo Germont.

The role of Violetta will be sung by Josephine Lucchese, soprano who has appeared here several times previously.

The offering for the second night, Monday, April 12, is "La Gioconda." Elda Vettori, St. Louis dramatic soprano, will appear as a guest artist in the title role and Manuel Salazar, the Spanish tenor, will sing Enzo.

"Lohengrin" will be given in its entirety Wednesday night, April 14 for the first time here in six years. The remainder of the program will be announced later.

BEHIND THE SCREENS

RUDOLPH VALENTINO has begun his preliminary work on "The Son of the Shiek," which George Fitzmaurice will direct. The story, from the novel "Sons of the Sheik," by E. M. Hull, weaves a pattern of romance and action against the exotic background of the Sahara. Vilma Banky, heroine of "The Eagle," will appear also as the leading woman in "The Son of the Sheik."

Mary Pickford has finally completed her new picture, "Sparrows." This production was more than seven months in the making and the negative is now being cut and assembled at the Pickford-Fairbanks studio. The working title of the film was "Scraps." "Sparrows" is the story of a baby farm in the swamp country, written by Winifred Dunn and adapted for the screen by C. Gardner Sullivan. William Beaudine, director of "Little Annie Rooney," directed "Sparrows." The cast includes Gustav von Seyfferitz, Roy Stewart, Spec O'Donnell, Charlotte Mineau, Mary Louise Miller, Billy Butts, Muriel MacCormac and Monty O'Grady.

Pauline Neff will play the role of Mrs. Bolland in "Ranson's Folly," which is now being filmed at the Coast for First National release. Miss Neff appeared recently in "The Midshipman," with Ramon Novarro and in "The Masked Bride," in which Mae Murray starred. She will also be remembered as the leading woman for John Barrymore in "The Man From Mexico."

Rod LaRocque, whose most recent starring picture, "Bachelor Brides," is just off production, is enjoying a short vacation prior to the start of his next production.

Director Rupert Julian is busy in the cutting room assembling "Silence," his latest production. The picture features Vera Reynolds and H. B. Warner.

With the announcement that Irma Kornelia, the Hungarian actress, Douglas Fairbanks Jr., and Charlot Bird, had been assigned important roles in "Padlocked," the cast is practically complete. Allan Dwan is directing this Rex Beach story. Lois Moran is playing the leading role of the picture. Noah Beery is playing the heavy.

The company which is filming Rupert Hughes' story "Money Talks," under Archie Mayo's direction, headed by Claire Windsor, Owen Moore and Bert Roach, left last week for Catalina Island where they will do the yacht and marine sequences of the comedy.

Victor Schertzinger has just completed "Siberia," the Fox version of Bartley Campbell's old stage melodrama. Alma Rubens, Lou Tellegen, Edmund Lowe, Vladium Uraneff, Tom Santschi, Helen d'Algy, Lilyan Tashman and Paul Panzer are in the cast.

Tom Moore will be Pola Negri's

Serge Prokofieff Has Had Unusual Career

Young Russian Composer Has Achieved Conspicuous Success in Europe—His Own Views on Subject of Musical Interest.

By OLGA SAMAROFF.

FOLLOWING the idea of bringing before my readers of the Evening Post outstanding personalities in the world of music in connection with their own thoughts on subjects of interest, which will from time to time be a feature of these columns, I could not let Serge Prokofieff, one of the most important of the younger Russian creative spirits, escape me.

Judging by the enormous publicity given to the "human interest" story of Marion Talley, the youngest prima donna of the Metropolitan Opera House, it would seem that some of the eventful life circumstances connected with other and much more important musical personalities, especially when associated with high artistic achievement, as in the case of Prokofieff, might well find a greater place in the interest of the American newspaper-reading public.

PROKOFIEFF was only 18 when he first attracted attention as a composer in Russia. His opera, "The Gambler," after a novel by Dostoevski, had been accepted at the Imperial Marinsky Opera in Petrograd and was in rehearsal when the Russian Revolution, which destroyed so much, cut his budding career short, so far as his native land was concerned. He escaped from Russia by way of Japan and arrived full of hope in the land of promise—America—to make a new life for himself.

But we are not always kind to creative spirits who dwell in our midst. To name some of the most important, we sent Mahler back to Europe disappointed and disheartened; Ernest Bloch is having a hard time to make a living by drudgery of teaching and young Prokofieff, after four seasons in America, during which some of his works were produced and received either with half-hearted praise or downright condemnation, turned his steps once more toward Europe, where creative music of importance, even if fought by some obstructive spirits, usually succeeds in winning its first real recognition, after which the world in general settles down to acceptance.

For the third time young Prokofieff began life anew, this time in the Old World. He sought the repose and solitude congenial to creative work in the heart of the Bavarian Alps, not far from Oberammergau, and there he also found romance. He and his wife were married in the old Monastery Church of Ettal, so intimately associated with the history of the famous Oberammergau Passion Play. Today, young Prokofieff is on the crest of a wave of vital success in Europe. His opera, "The Three Oranges," which was given in America by the Chicago Opera Company, has been produced by the Staatsoper in Cologne and subsequently accepted by the Staatsopers in Berlin and Leningrad.

ANOTHER opera, "L' Ange Flamboyant," Mr. Prokofieff, must supervise in Paris, where he has been living for the last two years, the rehearsals for his new ballet (as yet nameless) which Diakhileff will produce in the French capital in June. This ballet deals with the Moscow of 1920 and will have a decor and costumes designed by Iakoulov, the most talented among young Russian painters, as was proved at a recent much-talked-of exhibition.

The first question I asked Mr. Prokofieff was why the Russian creative spirit turns so decidedly in the direction of the ballet. He replied with the reminder of what a tremendous part the dance has played in the history of all humanity and added that Diaghileff, with his extraordinary artistic sense, imagination and enthusiasm, has been a source of great stimulation to Russian artists in whom he took an interest. So the ballet, as produced by this highly gifted man is a wonderful medium in its own colorful way to express those things for which the dance, combined with music, is such a powerful art form. Mr. Prokofieff spoke warmly of "Zephyr et Flor," a ballet of Dukelsky with decor by Brak, produced with great success in 1924 in Paris and London, after the composer had tried desperately and in vain to arouse some interest in his music in America.

This prompted a question on my part as to why the really new in music has invariably found so much opposition. Mr. Prokofieff replied that each new combination of sounds represents a new and more complicated mathematical

SECOND THOUGHTS ON FIRST NIGHTS

By Alexander Woollcott.

NEW YORK, March 20.

ALTHOUGH the dramatic critics of the world have ever patiently explained to the people of the theater that a good book rarely turns into a good play, the passion to dramatize continues unabated and will rule theatrical bosoms to the end of time. Most of the eventful novels of the past year are even now standing on the back of the stove, simmering against the Fall.

For instance, young Patrick Kearney (the author of the much applauded but meagerly attended piece called "A Man's Man") is hard at work compressing the colossal structure of Dreiser's masterpiece into the dinky dimensions of a play. This is the overpowering novel called "An American Tragedy" which Dreiser brewed from the Chester Gillette murder whrewith this State, at least, was shaken mightily a score of years ago. A towering book, I think, and fresh evidence of the excruciating unimportance of a fine literary style when compared with the rarer boon of having something to say.

Horace Liveright, Dreiser's publisher, has a not particularly secret impulse to be a theatrical producer instead and it took him no time at all to start Mr. Kearney to work on the dramatization. He had even speculated audibly on the chances of getting Glenn Hunter to play the weakling protagonist and June Walker to be the pretty, helpless, factory girl whom this boy drowns in an Adirondack Lake. The preparations had reached this bustling stage when some one thought to point out that after all, "An American Tragedy" was Dreiser's and that it might be just as well to ask his permission.

This proved difficult, because that gloomy genius had been swallowed up by New York and it took a week to trace him. His consent has now been obtained.

IT would be interesting to learn what Dreiser's own thoughts are on the subject of becoming a best seller after all these years, and how large a part of the huge success of "An American Tragedy" he himself attributes to the fact that it deals with murder. I myself wonder how widespread is my own unquenchable thirst for all books that deal with this subject.

I have assembled a modest five-foot shelf of cases from all over the world, but my collection is a poor thing compared with the 800 volumes with which Kathleen Norris whiles away her leisure hours. And my own shelf always strongly resembles a battered comb, so many are the gaps in it produced by light-fingered passersby who can ever be counted on to respect my property rights in the histories of dramatic criticism, but cannot be trusted alone in the room with "The Brides of the Bath," or my stenographic records of the Dr. Crippen case.

THEN Margaret Kennedy herself is at work on a stage version of her own "Constant Nymph," and Glenn Hunter and June Walker are also mentioned for this. Indeed, the American stage is passing quietly through a phase in which these two players are counted upon to play all the roles in all the plays.

AND up in some tranquil nook on Morningside Heights Prof. Erskine is dramatizing his own enchanting book, "The Private Life of Helen of Troy"—his droll, wise, luminous and deeply nourishing guess at what used to go on of an evening over at Menelaus' when the recaptured Helen was brought home from the sack of Troy. This book, though in narrative form, is made up almost entirely of dialogue. Indeed, if the words not in quotation marks were laid end to end I doubt whether they would reach as far as the end of the first chapter. And such dialogue! I have not read its like in 20 years. The play is still in the making and the plans for its production are still in the air, but the fact that the Professor and Ethel Barrymore have been doing a good deal of chatting over the telephone lately is probably no mere coincidence.

ANOT uncelebrated dramatization which drenched this land with the easier tears of yesteryear was revived here last week. Perhaps resuscitated would be a better word. That was the good old one-night standby, "East Lynne." Probably because it is a period more amusing to the eyes of 1926, the producers elected to costume it in the fashions of 1893 (when the piece was still going strong) than in those of the seventies, when its lugubrious moralizings were new.

For this revival was facetious, of course. What they did was to tie a tin can to poor old "East Lynne" and chase it with hoodlum hoots around the stage of the disagreeable little Green Village Theater. For some reason—probably because I myself go back into the nineties and a bit beyond them—this hazing of an old favorite filled me with a vague discomfort, hounded me, indeed, with a notion that I really ought to rise in my seat, lift a stern hand for silence and make

SAM H. HARRIS, one-half of the once famous firm of Cohan and Harris, has contributed more plays to the stage this season than any other manager. His latest entry is Sidney Howard's provocative play, "They Knew What They Wanted," in which Richard Bennett and Pauline Lord are co-starred. The play is announced at the American Theater for one week beginning tonight, with Richard Bennett and Pauline Lord in the leading roles.

Originally produced by the Theater Guild, "They Knew What They Wanted" had a wide and popular vogue in New York. It was one of last season's outstanding dramatic hits and rounded out an unbroken run of a full year at the Klaw Theater, which the Guilders leased from Marc Klaw.

MUCH has been written about Howard's play, which deals mainly with bootleggers, I. W. W.'s and in the indiscretions of an ill-favored girl who is caught in a swirling eddy of the most vital, soul-stirring complexities. Of one thing there can be little doubt. Howard never intended his play for the ears of children or young persons uninitiated in the ways of the world and the queer kinks of human nature. At the start of his career Howard floundered about through Italian verse dramas like "Swords" through pageants to be presented by Sam Hume at the Greek Theater in Berkeley, and through adaptations of foreign plays, of which "The S. S. Tenacity" is a good example and "Sancho" a bad one.

Then it occurred to him that he might try to write nearer home, choosing a subject about which he had some first-hand information. "They Knew What They Wanted" was the result.

HOWARD, born in San Francisco thirty-three years ago, knew intimately the Napa Valley, which provides the background in "They Knew What They Wanted." He was acquainted with its people. He could thus allow himself to roam easily through familiar fields. He no longer was hobbled by the metrical traditions of the Italian Renaissance.

Having graduated from the University of California, Howard developed an illness and spent a year in Switzerland. Then he studied the drama under Prof. George Pierce Baker at Harvard, leaving suddenly to become an ambulance driver on the Saloniki front. He later entered the American Air Service and commanded a combat squadron in France.

After the war he investigated the "industrial spy system" for The New Republic and the dope traffic for the International, and wrote book reviews for Life. He has also written "Three Flights Up," a volume of short stories, and is now at work on a historical novel.

Abie's Rose Returns.

ANN NICHOLS' celebrated play which downed the critics and is now in its fourth or fifth year—which is it?—in New York, comes back to St. Louis tonight for a week at the Shubert-Rialto. With proper encouragement at the box office it is probable that the piece will be seen here for two weeks, but no attempt will be made to equal the long run which it had in St. Louis last year, a record which set a new mark locally. The company to be seen here this time is an entirely different one from that which played here before.

the theater ring with the cry, "Stop, she's somebody's mother."

The implication of such a cartoon as this production—it's an exhibit of forgotten folkways akin to such relics as the bustle, the dance-card, the moustache cup and the horse-car—is that grandpa and grandma were not quite bright. I think it only fair to remind the survivors of the "East Lynne period that even when the play was new, actual grown-ups regarded it as so much phoney blah. The sad predicament of Lady Isabel did sluice a million cheeks to the strains of "Then You'll Remember Me," but they were the same cheeks which were also dampened nightly by books like "St. Elmo." However, I suppose that in 1960, my grand-children (on whom I have thus far made an admittedly inadequate start) will shake with laughter over a revival of "Abie's Irish Rose," saying one to another, "What a bird-brain grandpa must have been!"

ANOTHER recent adventure in Greenwich Village was the production in Cherry Lane of a new play by John Dos Passos, the pained young man who wrote "Three Soldier" and "Manhattan Transfer." This play, his first, is called "The Moon Is a Gong," and, by resorting to all the devices of the theater from ballet to declamation, from tragedy to opera bouffe, Mr. Dos Passos succeeds in saying that life in America is pretty terrible—a chain-gang intolerable to any free spirit and yet inescapable because man was not meant to live alone. This disposition of Master Dos Passos to see his own land and time as a gibbering nightmare must be distinguished, I think, from the reasoned distaste of all the philosophers from Cicero to Mark Twain. It must be distinguished, also, from the melancholy of a Strindberg. It is rather the sensitive resentment of one who has been a hilarious party and felt himself so much a misfit there that he has gone home miserable.

It took a bit of doing to put on "The Moon Is a Gong," even in a hole-in-the-wall theater and with an individually inexpensive cast. Wherefore, I wondered whose recklessness had made it possible and my eye was riveted by the program announcement that the piece was being presented by Juliet Barrett Rublee—a name unfamiliar even to the chronic playgoer. I was informed in the lobby that some young folks had gone on the rocks when the production was half-baked and that Mrs. Rublee had graciously come to the rescue. Next day in the morning chronicle of such events which is my trade, I hazarded the guess that any one who would finance so forlorn a hope must be of a mind so hospitable that almost any proposition would interest her. I learned since that Mrs. Rublee's earlier activities have included the financing of a deep-sea search for the lost Atlantis, active propaganda for Birth Control Education (including at least one arrest), public exchange of letters with the late Col. Roosevelt on the subject of mollycoddles and an occasional heroic willingness to don Greek draperies and do a dance on the greensward for her neighbors. Mrs. Rublee has even consented in times past to pose for the photographers as "Tacita, the Spirit of Eternity."

THAT Tacita should be willing to put up the money for so acutely uncommercial a venture as "The Moon Is a Gong" will surprise only the unobservant. For this multitudinous city is fairly a swarm with people eager to play Maecenas for the seven arts. Its every side street has some small time Otto Kahn who can be relied on to back any production that gives reasonable assurance of losing money in the name of art.

SOME of the more rarified groups in our town have been doing a little shuddering over the circumstance that Noel Coward's play "The Vortex," which had prospered moderately in Times Square, was recently rebuffed with something like contumely in Chicago. Indeed so few citizens of that community attended its 14 performances there that Master Coward now refers to his play wryly as "The Metropolis Secret." It would be best not to discuss this mishap in terms of New York's superior sophistication. Just around the corner from where "The Vortex" played here for five months, "Abie's Irish Rose" completed tonight its 1649th performance.

TWO PLAYS IN POETRY TO BE GIVEN WEDNESDAY

Wednesday Club to Present Kreymborg's "Manikin Mininkin" and Percy's "In April Once."

The "Play Poetics" group of the Wednesday Club will present two poetry playlets at the club auditorium on Wednesday afternoon. The first will be "Manikin Mininkin," by Alfred Kreymborg, a fantasy given here eight years ago, and it will be followed by "In April Once," a one-acter by William Alexander Percy. "In April Once" has never been seen in St. Louis before, and has had but two previous presentations, both of which were in the East.

Susan L. Cost and Gertrude Walther will act the Kreymborg playlet; the cast of the second will consist of Gustavus Tuckerman, Dr. Alphonse McMahon, Daniel Bartlett, Samuel Goddard and Mrs. Arthur Proets. The performance will be directed by Mrs. Walter Knight and Mrs. Samuel Goddard.

THE UNUSUAL CAREER OF SERGE PROKOFIEFF

formula which cannot be grasped at once with an insufficiently trained ear.

"ONE can compose," continued Mr. Prokofieff, "emotional music and absolute music. The former will more excite the passions of contemporaries, but the latter will be more lasting even if first accepted with less enthusiasm, for the emotional expression of a given age can become incomprehensible and sometimes ridiculous to succeeding generations." Mr. Prokofieff advanced the thought that the manner of making love was a good case in point. The vision of a lass of 1926 being wooed with a Mozartian serenade or verses a la Cyrano de Bergerac, or to speak of the type of remote and respectful offer of hand and heart that would have reduced a Jane Austen heroine to tears, forced me to admit that there is a good deal in Mr. Prokofieff's argument. He considers Bach as the highest example of the lasting vitality of absolute music.

I then turned to a more technical question of composition and asked Mr. Prokoneff how he felt about quarter-tones (of which we shall soon have a demonstration coming from the unexpected direction of Mexico) and whether he was using them. He said he felt that the field bounded by the semitone was still so rich in unused possibilities that he was not tempted in the direction of quarter-tones. He added that quarter-tones are used in India in music of a totally different type wherein it is much more possible to train the ear to the acceptance of infinite gradations of tone than in our music with is complex mass of counterpoint.

IN RESPONSE to an inquiry whether it was true that Miaskowsky and other Russian composers were turning back to Tchaikovsky, Mr. Prokofieff replied that the Fifth Symphony of Miaskowsky recently produced here by the Philadelphia orchestra was the least characteristic of his works but that in general composers realize that melody (which is essentially a feature of Tchaikovsky's music) is more lasting than harmony.

"The most novel harmonic discoveries can be imitated and adopted by others, whereas a melody is a personal creation and stands as such without possibility of imitation except through obvious plagiarism." It seems to me this utterance by one of the leaders among modern composers is very significant.

It looks as though the experimentation with harmonic idiom which has been going on feverishly for the last ten or 15 years has for the time being almost run its course.

In all Mr. Prokofieff said and the way he said it one felt a keen, clear brain, a direct sincerity, a real force of conviction without arrogance and a highly interesting personality. Before leaving he remarked whimsically: "Americans are so wonderfully up-to-date in their automobiles, trains and airplanes I have sometimes wished they might still drive in horse-drawn vehicles and go forward more easily in the things of art." Mr. Prokofieff is sailing in a few days to fulfill concert engagements in Italy and Germnay before returning to Paris for the rehearsals of his ballet. His piano concerto performed at a recent Boston Symphony concert in New York aroused the enthusiasm of the audience.

To sum up, the life of this still youthful and greatly gifted Russian from the moment of his escape, destitute of everything but the treasures of his own spirit, from the dangers and destruction of revolution to his present position as an acknowledged master and leading spirit in the art life of Europe, is, to say the least, quite as romantic as Miss Talley's journey from Kansas City to the Metropolitan Opera House. To be sure it took him considerably more time to make his voyage half around the world and up the ladder of fame, but the things Mr. Prokofieff does are not done in a hurry.

A BALLET DESIGNER'S RIGHTS

French Court Rules Director's Step Must Be Followed.

By the Associated Press.

PARIS, March 20.—The French courts have upheld the rights of the designer of a ballet as being just as valid as an author's over his book or a dramatist's over his play.

The question arose through an action brought by a mistress of ballet, Mme. Chasles of the State Conservatory, who has produced ballets at the Opera and the Opera Comique. She had been asked to give a ballet at an entertainment and she arranged the "Ballet of the Three Sultanas," with Mlle. Olga Soutzo as premiere danseuse. She was greatly surprised, she said, when Mlle. Soutzo changed the dance entirely from what had been rehearsed, and she brought an action for 20,000 francs damages as the ballet had been announced in the program as arranged by her. Mlle. Soutzo pleaded that a first dancer in a ballet had the right to interpret a dance as it appealed to her and was not obliged to keep to the exact steps laid down by the ballet mistress. The judgment of 1 franc recognized the rights of ballet mistress and author in principle.

TIMES OF "OLD ENGLISH" WERE NOT DAYS OF MILK AND WATER

bludgeoned head all "bloody but unbowed."

It was the day of the individual, nor were we in America behind our English cousins. Whitman sang to celebrate himself, and lived just as he would. Emerson was proclaiming in "Self-Reliance" that "Whoso would be a man must be a nonconformist." Thoreau was setting off the dynamite of a thought that makes our younger revolutionists seem all anemic: "The greater part of what my neighbors believe to be good I believe in my soul to be bad. . . .

"In any weather, at any hour of the day or night, I have been anxious to improve the nick of time and to notch it on my stick too; to stand at the meeting of the two eternities, the past and future, which is precisely the present moment; to toe that line." The Epicurean gesture of "Old English" goes not so far.

THEY were not milk and water days, nor days of prunes and prisms. What was but a theatrical gesture in an era, which loved the theater of melodrama as no other era has, we have taken for the substance of that era. But the spirit of the time is more truly summed up in the torrential and dynamic phrases of Paul Rosenfeld in his essay on the music of Wagner: "For life itself made the Wagnerian gesture. The vortex of steel and glass and gold, the black-express packets plowing the seven seas, the smoking trains piercing the bowels of mountains and connecting cities virbrant with hordes of business men, the telegraph wires setting the world aquiver with their incessant reports, the whole sinister, glittering faery of gain and industry and dominion, seemed to tread and soar and sound and blare and swell with just such rhythms, such grandeur, such intoxication."

In that pean a modern of the moderns sings his tribute to Victorian days.

Empress Has New Leading Woman

Ione Magrane, for several weeks leading woman with the stock company at the Empress Theater, has left for New York, where she has gone to enter a new production. Jean Oliver, who will take her place, will make her first St. Louis appearance as the Princess Luana in "The Bird of Paradise," this afternoon.

leading man in her next Paramount picture, "Naughty Cinderella," which si to be directed by Malcolm St. Clair. Other members of the cast are now being selected. Mr. Moore recently returned from a two months' tour of Europe. His latest screen appearances were in "The Song and Dance Man and "A Kiss for Cinderella."

Frances Marion, who recently signed with Samuel Goldwyn to write the scenarios for all of his productions, has begun work on an adaptation of the George Fitzmaurice production, "Beauty and the Beast," the story by Kathleen Norris. Ronald Colman, as soon as he completes work opposite Norma Talmadge in "Kiki," will play the leading role of the young Sicilian bandit in "Beauty and the Beast." Vilma Banky, who has not appeared in any production since "The Eagle" will play the part of the American heiress who visits Italy and is enmeshed in a romantic intrigue from which she escapes most happily.

Richard Barthelmess will star in "The Four Feathers," an adaptation of the story by A. E. W. Mason, according to an announcement. Barthelmess is now on the coast appearing in "Ranson's Folly," after which it is expected that he will produce "The Amateur Gentleman" from the novel by Jeffrey Farnol.

"What Price Glory" will be put in production at the Fox West Coast studio this week. Raoul Walsh will direct the picture from a script prepared by James T. O'Donaghue.

Thomas Meighan, who went to Florida for a short vacation following his work in "The New Klondike," his forthcoming Paramount picture, returned last week to the Long Island studio.

William Collier Jr. has deserted the flowing robes and jewels of his colorful roles in "The Wanderer," and "The Lady of the Harem," for the more comfortable clothing of a jockey. The reason is his assignment to play a featured part in "The Rainmaker."

Betty Bronson is going to take a few days' vacation following completion of her present picture, "The Cat's Pajamas," which William Wellman is directing.

Ernest Torrence is playing a featured role in "Padlocked," a Rex Beach story being directed by Allan Dwan.

"Puppets," Al Rockett's first production for First National, was started in New York last week with Milton Sills in the stellar role and Gertrude Olmsted as Sills' lead woman. The cast to date includes Sills, Miss Olmsted, Francis McDonald, Matilde Comont, William Ricciardi, Lucien Prival and Nick Thompson. George Archainbaud is directing.

GERMANS LIKE SHAKSPEARE

More Than 2000 Productions of His Works in Season.

By the Associated Press.

BERLIN, March 20.—Shakspeare continued his reign as the most popular foreign dramatist in the German theater in the season now drawing to its close. Although modern American and English productions have appeared in ever-increasing numbers, there was no dramatist able to challenge the Bard of Avon's hold on the favor of the German public.

This season there have been more than 2000 productions of 27 Shakspearean dramas by about 200 separate companies. "Twelfth Night" headed the list, having been given 231 times by 34 companies. Next in order came "The Taming of the Shrew," "The Merchant of Venice," "A Midsummer Night's Dream," "Othello" and "MacBeth." "Hamlet" ranked only twelfth on the list this season, while "Antony and Cleopatra" came twenty-third.

More than 25 German cities had 15 or more Shakspearean presentations, Berlin leading with more than 500.

SAGE TEA TURNS GRAY HAIR DARK

That beautiful, even shade of dark, glossy hair can only be had by brewing a mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur. Your hair is your charm. It makes or mars the face. When it fades, turns gray or streaked, just an application or two of Sage and Sulphur enhances its appearance a hundred-fold. Don't bother to prepare the mixture; you can get this famous old recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients for only 75 cents, all ready for use.

It is called Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound. This can always be depended upon to bring back the natural color and lustre of your hair.

Everybody uses "Wyeth's" Sage and Sulphur Compound now because it darkens so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied. You simply dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through the hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair has disappeared, and after another application it becomes beautifully dark and appears glossy and lustrous.

NEW AND BIGGER ACTS FOR THE POLICE CIRCUS

Use of Bucking Horses in Cowboy Scene Planned at Coliseum Next Month.

Present construction of the Coliseum, since the swimming pool was installed there, will permit use of some acts more thrilling than in the past at this year's police circus, which will open Monday, April 5, and run until April 18. For instance, use of bucking horses is planned in a cowboy act.

The performance, as in the past, is for the benefit of the Police Relief Association. More than 300 professional entertainers will take part, it is announced, and there will be 60 acts, several going on at a time in the big arena.

The swimming pool will be covered and the whole main floor padded with 12 inches of earth and tanbark, to give a real circus effect. There will be a matinee and an evening performance daily. The public is urged by the policemen not to wait till the closing days to attend and then be turned away, as sometimes has happened. General admission will be 50 cents. Tickets may be obtained at any police station or at the Coliseum, effective now.

Permission to hold the circus this year was given by the Police Board under new rules governing sale of tickets and program advertising space, designed to keep gamblers, bootleggers and professional bondsmen from buying quantities of tickets in the hope of gaining favors, and to prevent general solicitation of the public by policemen.

A circus entirely different from previous ones is promised. Among feature acts will be a loop walker, a man who walks from one end of the building to the other, upside down, suspended from loops; auto polo, a loop-the-loop stunt by a woman on a motorcycle, and a bucking flivver.

There will be an unusually large number of clowns, it is said, and numerous elephants.

Arrangements for children of various orphan asylums to be guests at some of the matinees are being made by Sergt. William Ryan, chairman of the Entertainment Committee. Capt. Charles H. Loepker is president of the Police Relief Association, in general charge of the circus.

OLD RELIGIOUS RITES PREVAIL IN JAPAN

Scantily-Clad Youths Race Through Streets to Bathe in Temple Fount.

By the Associated Press.

TOKIO, March 20.—Youths clad in little more than pleasant smiles are to be seen running through the streets of Tokio and other Japanese cities. They are a source of amusement to visiting foreigners.

But there is a reason. They are apprentices and young workmen practicing the "mizugori," or age-old water purification rites in Fudo temples to improve, through the grace of that particular god, their craftsmanship.

Their costumes look like abbreviated Ku Klux Klan robes, without the mask. They are only white cotton cloths, loosely thrown about cold-hardened bodies, and other smaller cloths wound around the head. Cotton cloth shoes are worn, but legs are bare.

As they run through the streets, usually in groups, the youths carry Japanese lanterns and tinkling bells herald their approach, and they chant "Rokkon Shojo," a prayer in which they ask to be cleansed of the six roots of evil.

Sometimes there are women among them. Years ago the apprentices wore nothing except loin cloths. The flimsy cotton garb worn now is not for warmth, but to comply with police regulations.

These religious pilgrims start from their homes shortly after dinner. They meet in appointed places and then begin their marathon to the nearest Fudo temple. As they run they keep their minds on their rites and they indulge in no boyish caprices. They chant unceasingly.

When the runners reach the temple they assemble at the well in the temple compound. Here they cast aside their single cloths and pour cold water over themselves from the tops of their heads. Then they offer prayer to Fudo. Hot amasake, a sweet, nonalcoholic drink made from rice, is served to the pilgrims by the temple authorities and the homeward trip is begun, with the same chanting and tingling of bells.

Even if their prayers are not answered, the followers of Fudo believe, their scantily clad exercises give them endurance, hardiness and healthy circulation of the blood. Wind, rain and snow do not interfere with the practicing of the rites and few of these devout believers suffer any illness from exposure.

SERMONS ARRAIGN SOCIETY FOR LAXITY, DRAW CROWDS

Apostolic Protopapas of Paris Sternly Criticises Mothers of Modern Youth.

By the Associated Press.

PARIS, March 20.—The Lenten jeromiade of Monsignor Dien, apostolic protopapas of Paris, who is decrying the license of modern youth, are a furore of the pre-Easter season and are drawing large crowds to the Church of St. Roch, as celebrated for its Lenten discourses as the Cathedral of Notre Dame or the Madelaine. His subject is: "Before marriage: Lectures for the women and children of society."

"Can anyone see one of the fashionable beaches of the day without a laugh—or a tear?" Monsignor Dien is asking his fashionable audiences. "The daughters are as much made up as the mothers, and as little clothed. What has become of the taste, refinement, delicacy and good breeding of the French woman?

"At 18 girls already have become hard. At 18 boys already are pouring their pernicious confidences into the ears of their sisters or young girl friends. Conscience is soon killed, and mothers let these things go on. They seem tired of responsibility; they have lost consciousness of their duty.

"The evil could be repaired and the country saved if mothers would fulfill their role as guardians of consciences. In this hard, modern age, mothers must preserve the love of a united family in the hearts of their sons and daughters."

HEIDELBERG BARREL OUTDONE

One at Eltville Holds 283,800 Quarts of Rhine Wine.

By the Associated Press.

BERLIN, March 20.—The famous Heidelberg wine barrel, once the largest of its kind in the world, is surpassed in size by a new barrel in the wine cellar of Matheus Mueller at Eltville-on-the-Rhine. It holds 283,800 quarts of Rhine wine.

If each drank a regular size three-quarter litre bottle a day, it would take 18 men 60 years to drain the huge container. It is 49 feet long, 23 feet wide and 9.84 feet in height. The Heidelberg barrel has been dry for many years but in the days of its usefulness it held 200,788 quarts. Mueller's wine cellar also has a barrel containing about 100,000 quarts of champagne.

Fewer U. S. Students in Prussia.

By the Associated Press.

BERLIN, March 20.—The number of foreign students at Prussian universities this semester has again reached prewar figures. There has been a noticeable falling off, however, in Americans. Of an enrollment of 31,256 in Prussian universities, 2112 are foreigners, Bulgarians leading with 246; Russians coming second with 191; Norwegians third with 108, and Chinese fourth with 101. The United States used to occupy fourth place, but is now tenth among nationalities.

KEEP LOOKING YOUNG

It's Easy—If You Know Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets

The secret of keeping young is to feel young—to do this you must watch your liver and bowels—there's no need of having a sallow complexion—dark rings under your eyes—pimples—a bilious look in your face—dull eyes with no sparkle. Your doctor will tell you ninety per cent of all sickness comes from inactive bowels and liver.

Dr. Edwards, a well-known physician in Ohio, perfected a vegetable compound mixed with olive oil to act on the liver and bowels, which he gave to his patients for years.

Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets, the substitute for calomel, are gentle in their action yet always effective. They bring about that natural buoyancy which all enjoy by toning up the liver and clearing the system of impurities.

Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets are known by their olive color. 15c and 30c.

News From Boy and Girl Scout Troops

BOY SCOUTS WATCHED FOR HIKING INTEREST

Observation of Objects Favored Is Recorded and Boys Grouped Accordingly.

That intelligently directed hikes may be used not only for instruction in scouting, but as a means of ascertaining the economic field for which each scout is best suited, is believed and practiced by Troop 57, the American Legion troop of Battery A, and their scoutmaster, Aristides C. Rivoire, who was asked last week to teach hiking at the scoutmasters' training school beginning next month. He is a commercial efficiency expert, and applies the same methods in handling his troops that he does in his business.

The troops averages one hike a week, going not only on the usual outing trips, but, among other places, to coal mines, steel plants, dairies, hospitals and the courts.

Scouts Are Watched.

Upon all trips the scouts are watched, and records made of the interest and understanding shown toward the different phenomena encountered. Upon the return of the troops the boys are tested as to what they observed and as to their grasp of the subject.

Using the records and tests as a basis, the scouts are divided according to their showing into industrial, professional and clerical groups, and these smaller units are thereafter taken on the kind of hike in which they are most interested. If a boy's interest remains greatest in one field, he is classed as being suited to it, and is encouraged to study along that line. Then when he leaves school he is found a position of that type by the scoutmaster. Six boys have been given employment this way. The remaining scouts still attend school.

Advantage of System.

"This system is of great advantage to the boy," declares Rivoire. "It reduces the chances of him becoming an economic misfit, and places him in a position where his knowledge and enthusiasm can be capitalized. Incidentally the harmony created by grouping boys of similar interests benefits the troop, and makes for its advancement."

To prove the latter point, the troop record was given. Since the adoption of the system in April, 1924, the troop has grown from a disorganized group of 16 boys to an active organized membership of 40, many of whom have merit badges. They have acquired a swimming pool, an auto truck, a gymnasium, a library, a cabin at Valley Park, and the use of the American Legion post camp at Yeatman, Mo. At this place horseback riding, swimming, life saving, and boating are taught. The truck is used both to carry the boys to camp and to teach them automobile mechanics.

North District.

At the suggestion of Junior Assistant Scoutmaster Monroe Phillips, Troop 3 voted to give awards to the Scout making the best record in signaling, first aid, and knot-tying before next September. The first contest will be held next Tuesday night. The Flying Eagle patrol won an interpatrol knot-tying contest last Tuesday, and also were given 75 points in inspection. The Peacock Patrol received 40 points and the Wolf 25 for inspection. Harold Goheen is leader of the Flying Eagle patrol, Herbert Herzog leads the Wolf, and Eugene Leberman the Peacock.

Assistant Scout Executive H. W. Haun spoke a week ago Thursday at Troop 122's parents' night. The meeting was at the Sherman Park Community Center.

Veteran Troop 103, of the Elmbank Methodist Church, voted to add five pup tents and five ponchos to their equipment March 12. With this addition they can provide shelter for the entire troop on overnight hikes. The troop extended a vote of appreciation to Scoutmaster D. M. Miller for his work. Miller is a veteran scout, and is a seasoned camper, having camped in Minnesota, Wisconsin and Florida.

The White Eagle patrol won the interpatrol contest that has been going on for the last two and a half months, and will be awarded a prize by the Troop Committee April 10. The patrol leader, Joseph Laska, advanced to the rank of Star Scout during the contest, which raised more scouts to higher rank and created more troop spirit than any other activity of the troop. The Hawk patrol took second place.

Five Eagle Scouts from Troop 33 are helping the scouts of Troop 205 to pass at least one test a week. They plan to continue in this work until Troop 205 has a number of first-class scouts.

Headquarters.

Field Executives John D. Wright of the North District, and S. C. Reaves of the West District returned Thursday from Briarcliff Manor, N. Y., where they spent a month at the National Training School for Scout Executives. The course included methods of organizing and financing a Scout Council, the work and personnel of committees, church relations, court of honor work and camp projects. These subjects were taught by national specialists, including men from Columbia University and Boy Scout National Headquarters.

ADVANCES RAPIDLY

ALOIS POMMER.

Twelve scouts helped the Stone Mountain Memorial Fund Committee by distributing 200 large posters throughout the business district of the city yesterday morning.

The educational department of the Pevely Dairy Co. is offering a tour of their plant at Chouteau avenue and Grand boulevard to all scout troops in the St. Louis district. The tour includes motion pictures, a demonstration of dairying methods and refreshments for the boys.

South District.

At a meeting of the South District deputy commissioners at the Annex Hotel Friday noon Scout Commissioner H. D. McBride spoke on the duties of a deputy commissioner. Assistant Scout Executive H. W. Haun talked on next summer's camp, and asked the deputies to canvass their troops for registrations for the camp.

The next South District scoutmasters' meeting will be held at 7:30 p. m. Saturday at the Missouri School for the Blind. L. A. Lang will be scoutmaster and M. D. Saylor, R. L. Hinchman and Paul Hendrichs troop committeemen. Those attending are asked to bring a flashlight and a scout handbook, and are requested to wear old clothes, as it is planned to hold the meeting out of doors.

Troop 4 has changed its meeting night from Tuesday to Friday.

A hike had been scheduled last Sunday for Troop 15, a new troop organized during the roundup, but because of the inclement weather the scouts stayed at their headquarters, passing tests and playing games. This troop has 10 scouts.

Troop Committeeman B. F. Eddie gave a party last Thursday evening to 14 scouts of Troop 27 who had had charge of a "hot-dog" stand at a show given recently by the Grant School Patrons' Association. Field Executive M. D. Shippey gave a short talk, and the boys put on an informal program. Sandwiches and ice cream were served.

Field Executive M. D. Shippey taught whittling to Troop 63 last Tuesday evening, starting in with a fuzz stick and leading to more advanced work, such as letter openers. He also displayed some of his wood-carvings.

Scoutmaster Vaughan of Troop 77 is on a three-months' trip to Oklahoma, the troop meanwhile being in charge of Assistant Scoutmaster Orr and Junior Assistant Scoutmaster Markham. The troop registered March 11 with three Eagles, eight Life Scouts, four Star Scouts, nine second-class and 11 tenderfoot Scouts. The Troop Committee for this year will be composed of Butler, Buch, Hoke, Stetler, Buschman and Bensinger. An investiture ceremony was held the night the troop registered, 10 pins being awarded. Twenty-five parents were present.

Scoutmaster William Vickers of Troop 104 is recovering from an operation for appendicitis at the Missouri Baptist Hospital.

Fifty parents and friends of Troop 123 were present at a Parents' night a week ago Friday at the Garfield School. The Scouts gave a play which had been written and rehearsed by them without assistance from the Scoutmaster. Scout demonstrations were also given. Deputy Commissioner R. C. Coleman presented the troop with their 1926 charter.

Walter Merrlin, new committeeman of Troop 152, took the scoutmaster, assistant scoutmaster and seven scouts on a nature hike to the Meramec quarry last week. He promised to take the troop on several hikes this summer. Troop Committeeman O. Gutfreund was unable to attend because of illness.

Troop 198 of St. John's Episcopal Church started an interpatrol contest last meeting. This troop has grown from six members on Dec. 1, 1925, to 19, in three patrols.

Troop 178 has voted to adopt the platoon system, as their membership is so large. The patrols were reorganized and former Senior Patrol Leader Georgo Schmitt was promoted to junior assistant scoutmaster, Rudolph Meyer, patrol leader of the Wolf patrol, taking his place. Elwood Graham, former patrol leader of the Panthers, was appointed assistant senior patrol leader. The six patrols and their leaders are: Fox, Wilson Rainer; Tiger, Roy Birkicht; Eagle, Arthur Fischer; Panther, Melvin Helbig; Wolf, Kurt Walkers; Beaver, Robert Risch. The Panthers were awarded individual prizes for winning a recent interpatrol contest.

Talks on merit badges, thrift and the troop paper, The Windjammer, were given Monday at a meeting of Troop 143. The troop gave a vote of thanks to R. Steffen for publishing the paper. Scouts William Wollman and Earl Shoemaker won prizes for the best sketches of a hike taken Washington's birthday. Lester Van Damme was appointed senior patrol leader, his place as patrol leader of the Silver Foxes being taken by Frank Kalina. Stephen Hopkins was appointed troop bugler, and will receive instructions at the Sherman Park Community Center.

West District.

Deputy Commissioner Aubrey C. Lindsley of the West District passed the new reptile study merit badge Tuesday, being the first person in St. Louis, and one of the first in the country, to obtain this badge. Dr. E. N. Birge was the examiner.

Assistant Scout Executive H. W. Haun met with the committee of Troop 223 at the University Presbyterian Church Thursday evening to perfect organization. The members for 1926 are William G. Alexander, chairman; J. C. Norris, and the Rev. Dr. James Hardin Smith.

Suburban District.

Field Executive M. N. Leavitt of the Suburban District presented Troop 3, Webster Groves, with its 10-year charter at the troop's birthday celebration Thursday night. About 35 parents of the boys were present. Each patrol demonstrated some phase of scouting, the Panthers giving a drill and exhibit of making camp, the Ravens tying knots, the Wolves demonstrating signaling, and the Eagles first aid. A "fathers and sons" hike was planned, and the organization of parents' clubs proposed. The scouts served ice cream and cake.

Charlie March, a charter member of Troop 9, Webster Groves, acted as scoutmaster at the troop meeting March 11. Scoutmaster Brackbill is using this method as a means of promoting better conduct in the troop. Similarly, each patrol leader appointed a scout to act as patrol leader for the next week. Those appointed were Carl Hansen of the Raven, Gene Andrews of the Eagle, Bob Harrington of the Bear and Herbert Mortland of the Lion patrol.

Troop 1, Brentwood, has taken up merit badge work on plumbing this month. Six boys have already passed this badge.

SCOUT WINS 48 MERIT BADGES IN 15 MONTHS

Activities of Alois Pommer, 16 Years Old, Include Athletics and Bookbinding.

To Alois Pommer, 16 years old, 5543 Grant court, belongs the distinction of being the St. Louis Boy Scout with the largest number of merit badges. Alois has earned 48 merit badges in 15 months, which is considered a great feat in the scouting world. He attributes his progress to the encouragement and aid given him by Scoutmaster Albert Vogel, and Assistant Scoutmaster L. A. Lange of Troop 4, Trinity Evangelical Church, to which he belongs.

Pommer is an Eagle Scout and his badges cover a wide range of Scouting activities, from athletics to bookbinding, and from pathfinding to electricity. He did not become a Boy Scout until May, 1923, and while he has accomplished much in this brief time, is not satisfied as he is ambitious to earn more badges.

There are 71 in all of the merit badges so he has the opportunity of increasing his Scouting training, and adding to his collection of badges.

500 GIRL SCOUTS MAKING COSTUMES

They Will Take Part in Pageant in Connection With Convention in April.

Five hundred Girl Scouts are at work in two classes designing and making costumes for a pageant to be given April 10 in connection with the Girl Scout National Convention here. The classes are held on Saturday, one, under Mrs. Ben Lang, meeting in the morning at the St. Peter's Parish House, 221 North Spring avenue, and the other, under Mrs. George Moore, chairman of the Girl Scout Court of Awards, in the afternoon at Christ Church Cathedral.

Every troop in the city has been assigned a part in the pageant, and is to furnish its own costumes. These will be of many types, including the national dress of each of the 52 countries in which Girl Scouts are organized. Old English and Greek apparel, and garments for a masque given before a queen and her court. Girls demonstrating cooking, sewing and housekeeping are to be dressed in aprons of their own making.

Although general suggestions were made by Miss Marjorie Abbott, chairman of the Costumes Committee, each girl did her own research for the detailed design of her dress. All work done is credited on the scout's dressmaker's badge.

The Bald Eagle patrol of Jennings Troop 1 has been given a bulletin board decorated with a hand-painted bald eagle in full flight. The donor was Adolph Siebert, a commercial artist and the father of a member of the patrol.

Miss Margaret Shepley spoke to Arrowhead Troop 7 about the coming National Girl Scout Convention here in April at the troop's last meeting. Second and first-class tests were passed afterwards. Laurene Steber joined the troop, which now has a membership of 28. Scribe Marie Werth has been sick.

The troop at Our Lady of Sorrows School, 5817 South Kingshighway, has adopted the Indian name "Coania," which means "lover of nature." Patrol leaders and corporals have been elected as follows: White Bear patrol, Frances Kramer, patrol leader, Dorothy Kuhlman, corporal; Blue Bell patrol, Helen Christian and Catherine McDowell; Lone Wolf, Clarice Wacker and Bernice Klick; Eagle, Virginia Kramer and Lorraine Roche. Marie Poehling was elected treasurer, and Helena Neinhaus, scribe.

Troop 38 last Monday practiced the songs they will sing at the Pageant in April, and held patrol meetings.

Troops 4 and 40 have merged into one troop of 30 girls and will hereafter be known as "Eagle Eye Troop 40." New patrols were organized Thursday, Grace Crow, Josephine Poe, Elizabeth Blackwelder, and Natalie Dozier being elected patrol leaders. Miss Poe taught some new yells.

Troop 39, of the Harrison School, Monday practiced an Italian dance for the pageant. Their captain, Miss Noble, is chairman of Pageant Dance Committee.

The Katydids of Troop learned a new game at their meeting. Each patrol inspected a patrol not her own. of the patrols are filled, and troop has a waiting list.

If you just want exercise

OF COURSE gardening does benefit the system. It hardens your hands, makes you muscular, gets you out-of-doors, gives you a fine appetite, rids you of indigestion and makes you sleep like a top.

But if you are seeking exercise, merely, why bother with seeds at all? Why not just dig?

Few will listen to this kind of reasoning. The fact is that everybody who starts a garden is out for flowers or vegetables. The exercise is incidental.

Gardening is a serious proposition. You want to be sure that you get full returns for those hours you work. But you may have to charge your work off to exercise if you don't exercise your judgment when you choose seeds.

Choose Ferry's purebred Seeds for the fine flowers and vegetables you can expect from them. They come from ideal parent plants whose history we know. Their purebred quality is not the result of accident or chance. Science and skill have been employed for years to maintain it. For seventy years we have been growing, weeding out, perfecting and testing. More extensive tests are made in our experimental gardens than anywhere else in the United States to determine that they are true to type.

SOCIETY OFFERS BIG SAVINGS

Gives Quarter Off Retail Prices to Members

A Society has been organized for the purpose of enabling the public to purchase wearing apparel at substantial savings. The benefits are nation-wide; any family in America can join it.

As an example of the savings to which members of this Society are entitled, regular $1.50 silk hose are listed in the Society's Bulletins at $1.29 a pair, retail. From this price members are entitled to a discount of 25%, or one-quarter off, making the price for this particular number only 79c. Equal values in a large line of merchandise are offered.

Substantial savings are thus effected, the Society being able to make these savings because of direct mail connections and the eliminating of overhead and selling expense.

Upon joining the Society, members are supplied with a complete portfolio of the Society's Bulletins, which describe and illustrate the merchandise. From these Bulletins members may select the goods they desire, which will be shipped direct to their homes on a genuine money-back guarantee of satisfaction.

At this time the Society is extending its membership by means of a novel membership campaign, whereby they are making a special award of $10.00 in free merchandise to every member who will co-operate in securing new members. Full particulars of the Society will be sent to anyone who will write to the National Thrift Extension Society, 1034 Book Tower, Detroit, Mich.

Removes Wrinkles in 15 Minutes--New Way

A veritable wonder-worker for wrinkled and flabby faces is a simple, harmless application made by mixing a spoonful of Powdered Tarkroot with a spoonful of lemon juice. Not only does it quickly smooth out the wrinkles and age lines—before one's very eyes—but it has a stimulating influence upon the weakened and relaxed underlying tissues. The mixture is spread over the face with the fingertips, and in less than fifteen minutes the mirror shows that a most marvelous transformation has taken place. When the substance is washed off the average face actually looks ten or fifteen years younger.

The results are far better than those obtainable from the most expert massaging—and the cost is less than three cents a treatment! Powdered Tarkroot can be obtained from any druggist.

INFLUENZA EPIDEMIC IN RUSSIA AND MEXICO

Worst of Difficulty Believed Passed in England; Situation Not Alarming in New York

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, March 20.—Reports from such widely separated parts of the world as England, Mexico and Russia may indicate the rising tide of a recurrent wave of influenza.

Vague rumors of a widespread outbreak of influenza in Russia, with hospitals in Moscow and Leningrad so full as to be obliged to turn away thousands of sufferers, have been current for the last two weeks. The Russia Public Health Service in New York, in a statement, confirms these rumors, stating that personal correspondence from Moscow describes the suffering as intense. The Public Health Commissariat of Russia considers it the worst epidemic since the great pandemic of 1891.

Reports from the rest of Europe say that though influenza has been prevalent throughout the winter, particularly in England, the crest is believed to have been reached about the beginning of the year. While precise information is lacking from Mexico, there is indication of outbreaks in both Mexico City and Hermosillo, capital of Sonora.

New York State has serious outbreaks in several upstate cities, with a record of 462 deaths from pneumonia and 76 from influenza for the week of March 7 in New York City alone, numbers that are larger than those reported for any corresponding week since the epidemic of 1918. Dr. Louis I. Harris, Health Commissioner of New York, says, however, that the situation is not alarming and that there is no epidemic.

TWO KEEPERS OF LIGHTHOUSE MAROONED FOR TWO MONTHS

Men Short of Supplies and Almost Prostrated From Prolonged Strain When Saved.

By the Associated Press.

PARIS, March 20.—Cut off from the world by two months of stormy weather, two lighthouse keepers, Mandolini and Feracci, wounded Corsican veterans of the World War, have been relieved at the Pointe du Raz light, one of the most dangerous points on the French coast. Mandolini has been there since Dec. 2. Feracci joined him Jan. 4, after which for many weeks it was impossible for boats to approach the rock on which the light stands. Their supplies were just barely enough for four weeks.

Repeated efforts to reach them failed. In the meantime evidences of the strain the men were under developed in the irregularity of the service. The light failed several times. The fog horn was silent at a critical moment and the brig La Surprise ran on the rocks.

Finally, just before the last attempt to reach them, the flag of the lighthouse was seen flying at half mast. A volunteer crew made a heroic dash to reach the lighthouse. They got only close enough to get a glimpse of both keepers, who, though alive, appeared to be in a state of great excitement. The boat had to turn back.

Later the storm subsided somewhat for the first time in two months, and a relief boat was able to get alongside the lighthouse. The two men were almost prostrated from the prolonged strain when they were relieved.

BLACK LIBRARY SUGGESTS WAY TO FIGHT CRIME WAVE

In Eighteenth Century Man Was Executed for Stealing Shoe Buckles.

LONDON, March 20.—Frequent accounts which reach England of the prevalence of crime in American cities have led students of the richest and rarest storehouse of crime literature in the world, the "black library" of the famous Old Bailey Court in London, to suggest that the speedy, severe punishment served to English criminals during the "crime waves" of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries might serve to reduce the lawlessness of American cities.

England then had armed desperadoes as numerous as gunmen in Chicago, but holdups on the King's highway were punished by death. The "black library" contains an account of how at a lone sitting of court nine robbers were sentenced to death. A man tried for stealing "one basket and one cloth, value two pence, and three keys" met summary justice. Two words record the disposition of the case, "guilty; death." In 1780 a man was sentenced to death for stealing a pair of shoe buckles.

The "black library" never stops growing. Fresh chapters are being constantly added. Records of trials are kept at the Old Bailey, while implements of crime, guns, daggers and infernal machines are kept in the "black museum" of Scotland Yard.

WALTHER LEAGUE SERVICES

The Lutheran Publicity Organization of St. Louis, under whose auspices noonday services are being conducted daily at the American Theater, Seventh and Market street, has designated the coming week as Walther League week. Prof. Walter A. Maier, former executive secretary of the league, will conduct the services. He is professor of Semitic languages at Concordia Seminary.

His topics for the week will be: "Modernism vs. the Bible"; "The False Promises of Modernism"; "Modernism not Modernism"; "The Destructive Tendencies of Modernism"; "The Crucified Savior." The Rev. E. C. Hofius, pastor of Gethsemane Lutheran Church, will serve as chaplain.

"Purges" and "Physics" Bad for Old Folks

While Dr. W. B. Caldwell, of Monticello, Ill., a practicing physician for 47 years, knew that constipation was the curse of advancing age, he did not believe that a "purge" or "physic" every little while was necessary.

To him, it seemed cruel that so many constipated old people had to be kept constantly "stirred up" and half sick by taking cathartic pill tablets, salts, calomel and nasty oils.

In Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin he discovered a laxative which helps to "regulate" the bowels of old folks. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin not only causes a gentle, easy bowel movement but each dose helps to strengthen the bowel muscles, shortly establishing natural "regularity." It never gripes, sickens, or upsets the system. Besides it is absolutely harmless and pleasant to take.

If past fifty, buy a large 60-cent bottle at any store that sells medicine and just see for yourself.

Simple Home Mixture Darkens Gray Hair

Cincinnati Barber Tells How Any One Can Prepare It in 5 Minutes.

Any man or woman can easily look twenty years younger by simply darkening their gray, faded, or streaky hair. This is now easy to accomplish with a recipe given by a well-known Cincinnati barber.

Simply take a half-pint of water, add one ounce of bay rum, ¼ ounce of glycerine and a small box of Barbo Compound. Shake and it is ready to use. These ingredients can be bought at drug stores at trifling cost.

Applied to the hair twice weekly this delightful mixture quickly gives the desired shade. It is easy to use, is not sticky or greasy, will not color the scalp and does not rub off.

School Ma'am of Kentucky Mountains Proves Herself Dead Shot in Duel With Brother-in-Law

Shot Relative Five Times at Station Before Fatal Encounter; Courts Failed to Vindicate Her Name From Slander, So She Took Law Into Her Own Hands—and Is Expected to Be Freed.

By F. A. BEHYMER,
A Staff Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

PIKEVILLE, Ky., March 20.

TAKE a mountain woman's good name and she has nothing left, for it is the code of the mountains that the woman who is not true to her husband is outside the pale of pity.

Ernest Coleman, though Virginia Coleman was his brother Melvin's wife, tried to take away her good name. She called the law to her help and when it failed her she tried to kill him and failed, but another day they shot it out in the narrow street of Greasy Creek coal camp and the man fell with a bullet through his heart and the woman was vindicated, for that is according to the code.

Virginia Skeens was less than 4 years old when her father died and life has been hard for her, but she had been born with a merry heart and she fought her way through, smiling as she fought. Now at 32 years of age, mother of three children, she is a fragile bit of a thing, scarcely seeming to weigh the 115 pounds which she claims, ready with an excuse for not weighing more, for she says, "I always worked too hard to grow."

Taught School at 17.

They lived at Hubbardstown, over in West Virginia, when her father died. There was a brother two years younger than she and four years later her mother married Mont Williamson and by and by there were six half brothers and sisters and very early she determined to be a school teacher and make her own way. She went first to the Presbyterian school at Inez, Ky., over toward Tug River, and later to other schools, working her way through, and graduated from Pikeville College and went to the Normal at Richmond and 15 years ago, when she was 17 years old, she was ready to teach.

She taught in the mountain schools of West Virginia and Kentucky and 10 years ago, at a teachers' institute here, she and Melvin Coleman, farmer, carpenter and school teacher, boarded at Mrs. Melissa Bentley's and that was the beginning of a six months' courtship. Word came from Iowa that teachers were wanted there and Virginia Skeens and Melvin Coleman and four others decided to go, but on the day appointed for departure three backed out and Sam Dameron was the only one, besides Virginia and Melvin, who went. These two had planned to be married in June, but they stopped at Catlettesburg and were married there, Dec. 31, 1915, and went on to Iowa and found schools to teach 30 miles apart, but were able a year later to locate nearer together and go to housekeeping.

But the mountains were calling them and they came back and Coleman bought a farm up Greasy Creek, contracting a debt of $3500.

Babies Didn't Interfere.

They were young and confident and they would both work hard and by and by they would have something. So Coleman taught and farmed and carpentered and Mrs. Coleman taught.

She was telling me in jail here how she had taught all the years since her marriage and I blunderingly suggested there were times, of course, when she didn't teach, when the babies came and afterward when they needed her care. But there were no such periods of exemption. "I just taught, anyway," she said and tried to laugh, but cried and was ashamed of her tears.

Still a little tearful, she told of that day she taught at Rock House School and rode horseback miles to her cabin home on Greasy and the next day the baby came. That was the one that died.

The other three lived and now they are fine, healthy girls—Claire, 9 years old, and Berbia, 7, and Baby Stella, 5—and smarter than most children, if she does say it herself. Claire ready for the sixth reader, Berbia ready for the fifth, and Stella through the first.

Proud of Children.

No wonder, either, for they learned the A B C's from blocks when they were 2 years old and their mother carried each of them to school at the age of 4, and each of them completed the primer before she was 5.

And the little mother's laughter rang through the jail as she told how Claire last year, when she was 8, spelled her daddy down at the spelling match on the last day of school.

Four years ago she got the Upper Greasy school at Alka Postoffice, two miles up the creek from Greasy camp, and that was near home and she had a better chance to milk the cows and dig in the garden and attend to the chickens and do all the ordinary things that a mountain farm woman expects to do. The washing, of course, she could do at night.

Teaching a mountain school, it seems, leaves so much unexpended energy. There are 70 or 80 children when school starts in the middle of July, because then the trails are good and the children can get to the school house. There is a dwindling when winter comes on. The roads get so bad that the "little fellers" can't come. Some of the bigger boys would rather "romp out" anyway. So by the time that school ends about the middle of February the attendance is down to about 30.

Husband Worked Hard.

But Mrs. Coleman did not permit the teaching of the mountain children to interfere with her other duties.

Saturdays she hitched the mare to the spring wagon and drove to Greasy Camp with vegetables and eggs and butter and was happy as she drove home with the gain of the day's peddling. No, her husband wasn't unkind or neglectful of her. He was away at his work, doing his part. They were working together to get out of debt. Nothing else mattered.

When Richard Coleman died 11 years ago, he left a thousand acres along the upper reaches of Greasy to his four sons, Melvin, Lonnie, Ernest and Paris, and three daughters, Mrs. Lonza Ratliff, Mrs. Midget Bentley, and Mrs. John Daniel. The acreage was divided without dispute, but bickerings later arose. The Melvin Colemans were criticized because, being educated, they could get ahead faster than the others. There was trouble about a road and a saw mill and litigation in which Melvin won against some of the others. They were always "messing around" trying to keep Mrs. Coleman from getting a school to teach. But she treated them all friendly and didn't stop speaking to them and sometimes when there was sickness she dismissed school and helped them.

Nephew Carried Pistols.

Now it was August and school was under way at North Greasy, and Elbert Coleman, 15-year-old son of Ernest Coleman, was one of Mrs. Virginia Coleman's pupils. Elbert was none too bright at his books, but he was precocious in other ways. It came to Mrs. Coleman that Elbert had said he was going to do as he pleased and he would like to see any teacher stop him, even if it was his aunt. And if his uncle Melvin interfered he had something in his pocket which would offset any physical disadvantage. To favored cronies he exhibited an automatic pistol, and negatived with scorn the intimation that it might be his father's. His dad, he pointed out, was partial to a .32-caliber special, but for himself nothing but an automatic would do.

Mrs. Coleman had a rule against smoking in the school yard. Against this would young Elbert assert his manhood. He walked out without permission during a lesson period and seated himself on a rock and lighted a cigarette. Mrs. Coleman went out and told him he couldn't come to school if he did things like that. He went home. When he returned a few days later he was a two-gun man with his automatic strapped at one hip and his dad's despised .32 special at the other. He exhibited them to selected confidants and announced that he had come to run the shcool. Mrs. Coleman heard about it and called in the trustee, who happened to be one of her uncles. They talked to Elbert and warned him, and he promised to reform. They did not take the guns from him. That is an indignity to which no mountain man will tamely submit, and they did not want to humiliate Elbert.

But his reformation was short-lived. A week later he was again disporting himself in the school yard as a two-gun man. Mrs. Coleman again called the trustee and they expelled Master Elbert and he went marching home with his two guns.

A few days later Mrs. Coleman was at Greasy Camp and walking down the narrow street between the rows of company houses she saw Ernest walking on the other side and called out "good morning, Ernest," but he scorned to return the greeting. She inferred he was vexed about Elbert. So she was not greatly surprised when Annie Ratliff, a cousin of the Colemans, dropped in at the school one day and told her Ernest was talking about her.

Then one night she heard a noise outside the cabin and went out and discovered Ernest under a peach tree with a weapon in his hand. She asked him what he wanted there. He muttered unintelligibly and pointed the weapon at her and slunk away. She did nothing about it at the time, but when he continued to talk about her she went to Magistrate Justice at Sutton and obtained weapon warrants against Ernest and the boy. Ernest retaliated by obtaining a warrant accusing Mrs. Coleman of serious misconduct. County Judge Pruitt threw it out without hearing any evidence, although Mrs. Coleman begged for a chance to prove her innocence.

Brothers in Gun Battle.

The day before Christmas, Melvin Coleman was riding horseback over his farm when Ernest and his son came with weapons in their hands and Ernest "demeaned" him as a "low life" for living with his wife and made grave accusations against her. Melvin tried to reason with his brother, but Ernest's rage increased and he raised his weapon and fired. Melvin flung himself from his saddle, drawing his own weapon from his belt. Melvin fired several shots without trying to hit either his brother or nephew, but one bullet wounded Elbert in the face. When Melvin's automatic was empty Elbert ran up to him and fired at his head. The bullet grazed his forehead and knocked him down. The others ran away. Melvin did not prosecute but Ernest procured Melvin's indictment.

Kentucky has a "gossip" statute which provides that any person who wilfully or maliciously circulates a slander may be punished by fine or imprisonment or both. Mrs. Coleman invoked this law against Ernest and County Judge Pruitt fined him $25 and would have sent him to jail for 10 days but Ernest appealed to the Circuit Court and on a technicality the case was dismissed.

The Colemans and the witnesses boarded the afternoon train for Greasy. Ernest and Elbert came through the coach where Mrs. Coleman was sitting with her husband and looked at her triumphantly, tauntingly. She burned with bitterness. The law had failed her. She would vindicate herself. The train stopped at Greasy. Ernest and Elbert and Ernest's brothers-in-law, Lonza Ratliff and Midget Bentley, and a nephew, Ruey Coleman, were together. There were six of them and they were known to follow the fashion of gun toting, but Mrs. Coleman, slipping away from her husband, ran forward.

"I didn't know whether they were armed," she says now, "but they were trying to take my good name from me and that's the awfullest thing any woman can be called upon to face, and I didn't care whether they were armed or not."

Five Shots Take Effect.

She advanced upon Ernest, firing. There were five shots in her automatic. They all took effect, three in Ernest's left arm, one in the left side and one in the left hip.

Her husband came up then and took the weapon from her. She turned to Deputy Sheriff Robinson, who had been on the train. "Let's go back to Pikeville," she said. He arrested her and brought her back on the train's return trip. She was released on $1000 bond.

Ernest was taken to Greasy Creek Hospital and later to his home at the upper end of the one narrow street that bisects the camp.

Now it was Saturday again. As her husband was over at Burdine at work and preparing a new home to take his family to, away from the dissensions of Greasy Creek, Mrs. Coleman hitched the mare to the spring wagon and drove the 2½ miles down the creek from the farm to the camp with butter and eggs to peddle. She carried along her husband's automatic.

Drives Slowly Past House.

Ernest Coleman, recovering from his wounds, was lying in an upper room at his home when he heard wheels. He raised himself on his elbow and looked out. Mrs. Coleman was driving by.

He arose and went downstairs and for an hour or two while Mrs. Coleman was below in the camp he stayed downstairs, going several times to the porch and looking down the narrow street.

Mrs. Coleman was going about her business in a businesslike way, with her .32 special protruding from the pocket of her coat. She had disposed of her wares and made her purchases at the store and was ready to go home. She laid the weapon beside her on the seat.

Ernest, looking down the street another time, saw the wagon coming. He stood on the porch with his hands thrust in the bib of his overalls, looking fixedly at the approaching woman. She saw him standing there, kept her hand on the reins and made no sign. In the middle of the street she was not more than 15 feet from the man on the porch. She drove slowly past without deigning to look toward her enemy. It was an exhibition of nerve which brought involuntary ejaculations of admiration from sundry persons covertly watching, expecting something to happen.

Woman's Aim True.

She had passed a few paces, the horse jogging along. Her back was to Ernest Coleman. His eyes narrowed. He drew his right hand from under the bib. It clutched his .32 special. He raised it quickly and fired. The bullet whizzed past Virginia Coleman's head and struck the mare in the flank. The animal plunged. Mrs. Coleman, controlling it with a firm left hand on the reins, groped with her right for her weapon. Ernest fired again, and missed. Mrs. Coleman swung her weapon around over her left shoulder and the two fired almost simultaneously. Each firing as rapidly as possible, they emptied their weapons. Mrs. Coleman was untouched. Ernest staggered backward toward the door and crumpled to the floor. When they picked him up he was dead.

Mrs. Coleman, not knowing whether she had hit her man, drove to the end of the street and "broke" her weapon and reloaded and as her wounded animal would not stand, she turned it and walked beside it back toward Ernest's house.

"I didn't know what might happen," she says, "so I came back." J. E. Hopkins and Mrs. Oliver Howell drew her into Mrs. Howell's home. Howell came presently and said, "You've killed him."

Mrs. Robinson sent for Deputy Robinson and he started to walk with her, the three miles of railroad track to Sutton. Will Ratliff went for his horse and followed them and gave the woman the horse to ride. So they came to Sutton and from there by train to Pikeville and to jail.

Tuesday was the examining trial. Witnesses were heard. "If the law of self-defense ever had a place," said Judge Truitt, "this is the place, but it is my duty to bind defendant over to the grand jury. If no stronger evidence is presented there, this woman will certainly be justified."

Elbert Coleman was there, a stunted, sullen lad in oversized overalls, with uncombed hair, listening to the witnesses, watching his aunt narrowly, with hate in his small black eyes, testifying briefly himself, in a hard dry voice except when they asked him where the bullet hit his father. Placing his hand over his heart then, saying chokingly, "right here." Then hard, dry speech again.

A sinister little figure of a boy, come into a man's heritage of hate before his time, but a boy still, for his lips trembled and a mist came to his eyes at the sound of a stranger's kind word afterward. How did he feel about it? He "felt hurt," that was how he felt, and there was in the shaken utterance all the pride and repression of the mountain boy who is called to take his father's place.

Dogged silence for a moment at the suggestion that he forego thoughts of vengeance and then a grudging but qualified promise: "If they let me alone. I've always been peaceable, they all know that."

So Mrs. Coleman gave bond and she and her husband returned by train to Greasy Camp and walked the two and a half miles to their farm, alert every step of the way, for a life for a life is still the law of the mountains. Howbeit, the Colemans, long strife-plagued, now hope for peace.

SYMPHONY FUND DRIVE TO BEGIN APRIL 5

Three Hundred Men and Women Organized to Canvass for $150,000 Guarantee.

Three hundred men and women workers will meet at Hotel Chase, Monday evening, April 5, to begin a city-wide canvass in behalf of the guarantee fund of the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra. They will canvass former contributors and new prospects in an effort to raise $150,000 yearly for a term of three years, a guarantee similar to one which now expires.

Oliver Richards, vice president of the Symphony Society, and chairman of the guarantee fund campaign, will direct the workers—200 women and 100 men. A quiet canvassing among former guarantors is now under way.

The women solicitors have been arranged into groups with a chairman and co-chairman for each. To date, 20 such groups have been formed with 10 or more workers in each, making a total of more than 200 women who have already enlisted their services. The men workers will be organized into teams of two each. Most of the men who will serve in this capacity are former guarantors of the orchestra, and many of them are members of the Board of Control of the Symphony Society.

Speakers' Bureau Organized.

A special plans committee has been appointed to take care of all arrangements for the canvass. Mrs. Thomas G. Ratcliffe is chairman, and the other members, all of whom are members of the Symphony Society, are as follows: Oliver Richards, Hugo Koehler, Mrs. O. K. Bovard and Mrs. Max A. Goldstein. Headquarters have been established in room 301 of the Equitable Building, and the special committee is meeting daily to oversee the carrying out of the plans.

The speakers' bureau, organized by the Women's Committee of the Symphony Society to give four-minute talks before various women groups on the value of the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra to this community, is another feature planned to promote the success of the canvass, according to Richards. Mrs. Vertrees Young is in charge of the bureau. This phase of the campaign will be enlarged after the first of April to include talks before the various men's luncheon clubs.

"This canvass for funds for the Symphony Orchestra will differ from the majority of drives, in that there will be no daily group luncheon fo rthe workers or blackboards announcing results that characterize most personal solicitation drives," said Richards in discussing the plans. "There will be an inaugural dinner, then perhaps one or two luncheons, but that will be all. It is hoped that enthusiasm and earnestness on the part of the workers to see the orchestra continue to operate will supply the necessary amount of pep to bring the drive to a successful conclusion.

Necessity for Fund.

"Three years ago the Symphony Society conducted a drive to finance the orchestra from then until the present time. The amount needed to sustain the orchestra at that time was not too great for the city of St. Louis to subscribe," continued Richards in discussing the goal for this canvass, "and as the city is even better pleased with the orchestra and Director Ganz now than then, there will, we hope, be no great difficulty in securing a new guarantee fund."

The necessity for obtaining another guarantee fund for the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra was disclosed in a recent joint meeting of the Board of Control and Women's Committee of the Symphony Society. At that time it was announced that the current season is the last provided for by the guarantee fund subscription obtained three years ago, and immediate renewal of this fund was found to be necessary if the orchestra continues to operate for another three years. Accordingly, the present plan of canvassing former guarantors and new prospects was devised by a special committee appointed to represent the two bodies.

Advertising St. Louis.

There are only two sources of support available for a symphony orchestra, according to Richards—receipts from ticket sales and the subscription fund. A symphony orchestra can never be a self-sustaining organization. Tickets must be be popular priced to meet the average pocketbook and to compete with other attractions in the city. On the other hand, the orchestra members are necessarily higher-priced than the ordinary entertainer, for they represent the best of their profession, and will be snatched by other cities unless paid accordingly. Ticket sales must, therefore, be supplemented by a guarantee fund, the board of control has found. This is true in the 10 other cities in the United States having established symphony orchestras.

The orchestra at the present time is on its annual spring tour. It is not only giving regular evening concerts in the various cities that it is visiting, but in many places it is giving children's concerts similar to the series given here during last year. This phase of the orchestra's activtes, which so extensively advertises St. Louis as a cultural center, is considered by the board of control as one of the very best reasons why St. Louis should continue to maintain a symphony orchestra.

Capital Mourns Death of Father Of President

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, March 20.

AFTER a week of anxiety which Washington society shared with the President and Mrs. Coolidge over the illness of Col. John C. Coolidge, which terminated fatally on Thursday night, the news of his death suspended all social activities in the capital until after the funeral.

Out of respect to the memory of Col. Coolidge, Mrs. Frederick Dent Grant, who was to have entertained at dinner Friday night for the Vice President and Mrs. Dawes, postponed her function, and the Cabinet dinner, to have been given by the Secretary of Commerce and Mrs. Herbert Hoover next Tuesday night for President and Mrs. Coolidge, also was canceled.

All official entertaining, not only in American circles but in the Diplomatic Corps, as well will be suspended for at least a month and the White House will observe from three to six months mourning. The coming of the King and Queen of Spain to America in September necessarily will shorten the period of official mourning for officials here as formal entertaining will have to be extended to them.

There will be no further musicales at the White House this spring, the one on Thursday being canceled just before the President and Mrs. Coolidge started for Plymouth.

There has been a season of titled visitors in Washington and in May will come one whose fame has preceded her in Dame Rachel Crowdy of England, who received her title because of her distinguished war service.

There was a pleasing addition to the Cabinet circle on Tuesday when a fifth child, a girl, was born to the Secretary of Labor and Mrs. James J. Davis. The President and Mrs. Coolidge sent flowers to greet the new arrival, and Mrs. Coolidge presented a tiny pink sack she had Rush of American Tourists to Europe Marked by Arrival of 1500 in Week.

Special Correspondence of the Post-Dispatch.

PARIS, France, March 13.—Both the weather and the annual spring tourist rush from across the Atlantic appear to be about one month in advance this year. The temperature during the past fortnight in Paris was so mild that early flowers and shrubs along the Champs Elysees have begun to appear in new dress. Open-air taxis chalked up their periodical increase in fares. The number of January American visitors to the Continent represented an increase of 25 per cent over the total for the same period of 1925 and that despite the fact that the jubilee in Rome attracted an unusually large number of pilgrims last year.

Recently in one week more than 1500 Americans disembarked at Havre, Cherbourg, Boulogne, Bremen, Liverpool and Southampton, and half that many at ports on the Mediterranean. Transatlantic shipping companies expect a record travel year, and many of them report heavy bookings as late as September and October. A big part of this migration, they say, will be made up of large and small travel parties organized throughout the United States.

Mr. and Mrs. Leicester B. Faust and Mr. and Mrs. Joseph L. Werner of St. Louis have been at the Grand Hotel in St. Moritz, Switzerland, for the late winter sports and are now in Paris. They will return home early in April.

After staying for eight weeks at the Hotel Loe in Munich, Germany, in the course of a European tour, Mrs. Edgar Rombauer of St. Louis and her daughter, Miss Marion Rombauer, went to Dresden. They intend to travel through Northern Germany, Holland and Belgium to France, and to sail from Boulogne for home on May 5.

Hugh Scott of St. Louis is another Missouri visitor to Paris. He registered at the Hotel Wagram.

Roy Sheldon, the sculptor, entertained friends informally in his studio in the Rue de la Tombe-Issoire in Paris last week. His guests were friends from St. Louis, where he formerly made his home and where his family has lived for four generations. Among those present were Mrs. George Warren Brown, who recently returned to the French capital from the Riviera, and Mrs. W. F. McElroy and her daughter, Miss Jane McElroy.

Missourians who have registered at the Hotel Lotti in Paris during the past fortnight include Mrs. Martha Jones and Charles Lemp, both of St. Louis.

Passengers landing at Havre from the French liner Savoie, on its most recent call from New York and proceeding to Paris, included Gen. and Mrs. William Johnston. Gen. Johnston is well known in St. Louis, where he attended Washington University from 1876 to 1879. He was awarded an honorary L.L.B. by that institution in 1897. Gen. Johnston also is an honor graduate of the United States Army Infantry and Cavalry School of Instruction at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., class of 1887. His first wife was Miss Lucille Barat Wilkinson of St. Louis. Following her death, he was married in 1923 to Miss Isabelle Gros of Paris. Gen. Johnston's military advance has been from a private, through the grades of Corporal and Sergeant in the Lafayette Guard of St. Louis to that of Brigadier-General in the regular army. He was awarded the Distinguished Service Medal and Digtinguished Service Cross for his part in the Meuse-Argonne offensive and duty in Belgium during the World War. Following their visit in Paris, Gen. and Mrs. Johnston will go to the Riviera.

As a member of the St. Louis Pilgrimage to the Holy Land, Lawrence O. Murray, former Comptroller of the Currency of the United States and Assistant Secretary of Commerce and Labor, left Paris March 10. The party's itinerary called for a first stop at Constantinople, then visits to Smyrna and Beirut, later a journey through Syria to Jerusalem for Easter, and spending two weeks in and around Jerusalem. Mr. Murray will go to Alexandria and Cairo, Egypt, and then leave the party to go up the Nile by steamer to Luxor.

The dinner dance at the Paris Ritz last week was informal, but gave promise of the opening of a gay season in the near future. Mr. and Mrs. Herman Huffer Jr. entertained a party of 12 guests, including Mr. and Mrs. Axsel Wichfeld and Signorina Romano Avezzano, daughter of the Italian Ambassador to France, whose mother was Miss Jasqueline Louise Taylor of St. Louis. Mrs. Penelope de Neaux has as her guests Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Russell of St. Louis and Paris.

A luncheon was given by Mr. and Mrs. Louis Lombard last week at their fine old estate, Trevano Castle, in Lugano, Switzerland. Among their guests were the Consul-General and Mrs. Ravndal, Signor and Signora Veladini and the Mayor of Lugano. Mrs. Lombard was Miss Alice Maud Allen of St. Louis.

Frederick A. Sterling of St. Louis, Counselor of the United States Embassy in London, was among the members of the Diplomatic Corps introduced by the Marshal at the King's levee last week at Saint-James' Palace.

Lectures on Art of Old Monastery

Rev. Father Francis X. Mannhardt Speaks to St. Louis Art Alliance.

A large and fashionable audience greeted the Rev. Father Francis X. Mannhardt, S. J., who lectured Friday afternoon at the Artists' Guild before the St. Louis Art Alliance.

Father Mannhardt occupies the chair of History of Christian Art at St. Louis University, and recently returned from Europe, where he made an intensive study of the art of the Beuron Monastery in Germany. The monastery was founded in 1075 for Austin, Canon, and suppressed in 1802. It was purchased from the Government and given to two Benedictine monks, who were newly establishing their order in Germany in 1862. Since then the Beuron Monastery has become the head of a Benedictine congregation, numbering 12 or 14 monasteries for men and three convents for women.

The title of the lecture was "The Unusual and Valuable Art Activities of the Beuron Monastery."

Mrs. Mary B. Pollard is president of the Art Alliance; Mrs. Edgar J. Swift, secretary; Mr. Holmes Smith, professor of the history of art at Washington University, treasurer. The board of directors includes Mr. and Mrs. A. Blair Riddington, Mrs. Arthur J. Ewing, Mrs. Walter B. Douglas, Mrs. William V. Schevill, Miss Frances Hall and Miss Agnes Lodwick.

Dinner for Mrs. Michael.

The board of directors of the Missouri Association for Occupational Therapy will give a dinner Thursday evening at the University Club for Mrs. Elias Michael, who will depart soon to pass several months in Europe. Mrs. Michael is vice president of the association and was among the first to advocate therapy departments for hospitals and institutions.

Mr. and Mrs. Clement McCune Brown of 5070 Waterman avenue gave a dinner Friday night in honor of Dean Clare Mendell of Yale, who, with Dr. James Rowland Angell, president of the university, have spent the past few days in St. Louis. The visitors were guests of honor at the Yale alumni dinner last night at the University Club. Dr. Angell was a guest at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Harry B. Wallace.

Mr. and Mrs. Brown are entertaining Miss Virginia Whitaker of Mrs. George Shattuck of Boston, Mass., who has been visiting Mrs. Ira E. Wight, 484 Lake avenue, departed Thursday for her home.

Secretary of War Dwight F. Davis and his daughters spent the week-end at the Virginia Hot Springs where Mrs. Davis is spending Lent with her son, Dwight F. Davis Jr., who is on vacation from his boarding school. Mrs. Davis will return to Washington to pass Easter with her family in their beautiful new home on fashionable Q street, Northwest.

The Vice President and Mrs. Dawes enjoy a bit of jazz in their dancing. They showed this Tuesday, when they were guests of honor at a dinner given at the Mayflower Hotel by Senator and Mrs. William H. King of Utah.

After the dinner, at which 125 guests were present, dancing followed, and the Vice President danced merrily to the jazz tunes. President and Mrs. Coolidge were entertained at dinner on Tuesday night by Secretary of the Interior Work. It was the largest Cabinet dinner of the season, more than 100 persons being present. Mrs. A. W. Bissell, daughter of the Secretary, acted as hostess. Among the Missourians present were Mrs. Frederick Dent Grant and Mrs. John B. Henderson and Mrs. Howard L. Hodgkins, wife of the dean of George Washington University.

The Champ Clark night of the Missouri State Society has been postponed until later in the spring because of the absence in Honduras of Col. Bennett Champ Clark of St. Louis and Mrs. James M. Thomson of New Orleans, children of the late Speaker, and the illness of Mrs. Champ Clark's sister, Mrs. A. B. Pitzer, which is detaining Mrs. Clark in Kansas City.

Miss Henrietta Samuels of 5451 Delmar avenue, entertained a number of friends at bridge Sunday afternoon, March 14.

HARVARD BUILDING BUSINESS LIBRARY

Structure Will Have One of Largest Reading Rooms in America.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., March 20. —In the center of the new group of buildings for the Harvard Business School being erected on the south bank of the Charles River near the Stadium there will be a large library building to house the collections of the Harvard Business Library and the collections of the recently formed Business Historical Society—an accumulation of two of the outstanding libraries on business in the country.

The building for the new library, an adaptation of Colonial architecture, will face the River Charles through a vista of trees and across a yard intervening between two handsome groups of dormitory buildings. In size the building will measure 240 feet frontage by approximately 80 feet in depth. The whole of the frontage will be taken up on the second floor by one large reading room designed for a capacity of about 425 readers, incidently one of the largest reading rooms in any library in America.

Corresponding rooms on the first floor of the front part of the building will be devoted at this time to other uses of the Business School. It is foreseen that with the future growth of the library and the school, this space now devoted to school functions will be changed to library purposes.

Room for Societies.

There will be one room or a series of rooms devoted to the uses of those societies which have joined hands with the Business Library in the accumulation of business material. The Business Historical Society will have a directors' room and the Railway and Locomotive Historical Society will have a room for meetings of its members in which will be gathered together some of the historical collections of that society.

The sort of books being gathered by the library and the Business Historical Society may be characterized as follows:

The period of the merchant adventurers began with the travels of Marco Polo and Hakluyts collection of voyages. In addition to the guild records, British and continental records of business of an economic nature go back in many cases to the seventeenth century. Records of costs, wages and conditions of feudal times are found in pamphlets, often issued surreptitiously during the period of Elizabeth and through to the advent of William in 1688. The technique of early French business methods is illustrated in the writings of Savary, the first busines man to use the case system; Daniel Defoe in his several volumes on English commerce and English trade, published about the years 1725-30, is still good doctrine, as well as good reading; Anderson's History of Commerce and MacPherson's Annals of Commerce cover the economic thought of England at that period. There are many histories of the Bank of England, material on the East India Company, speculative manias and the like, and the various episodes relating to the British public finance. Academic discussions followed during the period of Sir John Steuart, Adam Smith, Ricardo and McCulloch.

Perhaps the best of the collections so far gathered lies in early American data relating to the beginnings of our various business enterprises. The period of maritime supremacy in the New England States is covered by a documentary collection of ships' logs, ships' manifests, and much private correspondence relating to the period. Many pamphlets are in the collection relating to the investigations and development of the canal companies. There are also thousands of pamphlets and documents covering the early history of our railroads, both those officially issued by the companies concerned and by the various state governments. Some of the earliest pamphlets relating to the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad are very scarce and nearly unprocurable and illustrate the conditions of the early railroad era. There is hardly a railroad having its beginning in the United States which is not covered by the officers' reports of the company, messages from the officers, quarrels in the Legislature, and investigations of scandals.

The Colonial history of our Government was also rich in financial experience. The Lodge edition of the complete works of Alexander Hamilton illustrates our financial difficulties during post-Revolutionary days. Economic conditions and Economic thought of this vital period of American history are covered by many of the writings of Benjamin Franklin, Samuel Adams, and other members of the Adams family.

HUMAN BLOOD DONORS LIKELY TO LOSE JOBS

London Experimentors Find Washed Animal Blood Will Save Human Lives

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

LONDON, March 20.—Important experiments on blood transfusion, made by Prof. Yourevitch and Mlle. Teleguina of Prague, appear to lead to the conclusion that special human blood donors will no longer be required in cases where transfusion is necessary to save a patient's life. The blood of a sheep or a cow might serve the same purpose, and special preparations of solution could be made in advance, and kept in bottles until required.

It has long been known that the most important point about blood in regard to transfusion is its specificity. That is to say, a rabbit can only be saved by the injection of the blood of another rabbit. If the blood of a different animal is injected into its tissues, it dies immediately. In the case of human beings, blood has been divided into four groups. When an injection has to be made, the blood of the patient has first to be tested to see which group he belongs to. Only rare individuals of the fourth group can give blood to any of the others with beneficial and not dangerous results.

New Line of Treatment.

Prof. Yourevitch and his woman colleague have opened up an entirely new line of treatment. They separated the red blood corpuscles from the serum by centrifuging methods. They found that the poisonous qualities which on injection have such harmful effects are in the plasma, and that if the separation or "washing" is thoroughly carried out, the red blood corpuscles of an animal of one species can be injected into another without the slightest danger, but, on the contrary, with completely satisfactory results.

Rabbits which had lost an absolutely fatal quantity of blood could be saved by the injection of sheep's blood, which would have been highly poisonous to them, provided only the washed red corpuscles were injected.

A rabbit which had received 10 to 15 cubic centimeters of unwashed ox blood died within five or six minutes. Another rabbit was given similar blood which had been partially washed, added to some of its own. After a period of serious prostration, it recovered. But a rabbit which had received only the red blood corpuscles of ox blood, which had been thoroughly washed, recovered completely without any detrimental symptoms.

Suggestions of Investigators.

It is confidently suggested by the investigators that in cases where human blood of the right group is not immediately available for transfusion, blood of any other group would be equally beneficial, provided only the washed red corpuscles were used. They also indicate that in their opinion blood of animals could probably be used in the same manner, if no human blood could be obtained.

It is further stated that a preparation of red blood corpuscles in a salt solution has been kept perfectly in bottles, and that there is no reason why such a preparation could not be made up in a standard manner, and stocked for use according to necessity.

CHURCH OFFERS PLAYS ON SUNDAYS TO COMBAT MOVIES

Pastor at Middlesex, England, Starts With Maeterlinck's "Mary Magdalene."

By the Associated Press.

LONDON, March 20.—Several English churches have taken steps to meet the competition of cinema proprietors, who have made plans to "capture Sunday" for the picture performances in various parts of the country.

The Rev. J. R. Bentley, Baptist pastor at Middlesbrough, has anticipated plans of the film house managers and for a period has decided to replace sermons by plays. The first piece produced was Maeterlinck's "Mary Magdalene," which was voted a success.

"There," said the Rev. Mr. Bentley, "is a drama more powerful than many sermons and as put on in Middlesbrough will give the motion picture proprietors something to think about." Other well-known plays will be given each Sunday evening.

SIMPLIFIED SPELLING URGED

Many Prominent Men in England Join in Movement.

By the Associated Press.

LONDON, March 20.—Many prominent men in England have joined a movement for simplified and phonetic spelling. A petition is being circulated asking the Prime Minister to appoint a royal commission to consider and report on the question. Sir Robert Baden-Powell's signature is first on the petition, as he is vice president of the Simplified Spelling Society, and he is supported by a number of professors in the English universities.

Conservative England, however, has never been enthusiastic about proposals to substitute phoentic spelling for the present tangled orthography. It is recalled that the late Sir Isaac Pitman, whose name is connected with a world famous system of shorthand of his invention, also was an enthusiastic advocate of phonetic spelling. His campaign for a new orthography was as pronounced a failure as his shorthand method was a success.

Weddings and Engagements

Melsheimer-Schmoll Ceremony Takes Place at Church in Presence of a Large Gathering.

The wedding of Miss Laura Anita Melsheimer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Melsheimer of 59 Aberdeen place, and Dewey John Schmoll, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Schmoll of 3626 Utah place, was solemnized last evening at 8 o'clock, at the St. Marcus Evangelical Church. The Rev. E. E. Leibner officiated in the presence of a large gathering of relatives and friends of the couple. The chancel was banked with palms and ferns and the tall vases of Easter lilies adorned the altar.

The bride was attended by her sister, Mrs. Eugene Barnbeck, as matron of honor, and Misses Verona Schroth and Vera Stanwood of Chicago and Mrs. Oliver Selle as bridesmaids. Fred Schmoll served as best man for his brother. Rudolph Stuckenberg, Oliver Selle and Smith Diringer were ,the groomsmen, and the ushers were Eugene Barnbeck and Adrian Schmoll.

The bride wore a gown of ivory satin embroidered in seed pearls and crystal beads, made on straight lines with godets of Brussels lace. The train was of bridal satin and was embroidered with pearls, and her tulle veil was held in place by orange blossoms. She carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley.

Mrs. Barnbeck wore a gown of green lace and a picture hat of peach horse hair braid, ornamented by a single rose of deep pink. The bridesmaids wore becoming gowns of georgette combined with taffeta, made simply with sleeveless round neck bodices and flared skirts. They wore peach-colored hats, trimmed with a velvet ribbon of the color of their gowns. Miss Schroth's gown was of pale yellow, Miss Stanwood wore pink and Mrs. Selle's gown was orchid. They carried bouquets of spring flowers.

A large reception was held at the Century Boat Club. Mr. and Mrs. Schmoll will pass their honeymoon in the East.

The announcement of the engagement of Miss Marie Winter and Raymond M. Henley of Kirkwood was made at a luncheon given by Mrs. Howard Warfield, a sister of Miss Winter, yesterday. Miss Winter is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Winter of North Taylor avenue, Kirkwood. She received her education at the Kirksville Teachers' College and is well known in musical circles. Mr. Henley is the son of Mrs. Charles F. Tacke of East Adams avenue. He is an alumnus of the University of Illinois, class of 1920. The wedding probably will take place in June.

Dr. and Mrs. W. C. Crenshaw of 3901 West Pine boulevard, announce the marriage of their daughter, Marjorie Pearl and William E. Buddie of Memphis, Tenn. The wedding took place Sunday afternoon, March 14, at 3 o'clock, at the home of the bride's parents. Dr. Charles W. Tadlock, pastor of the Centenary Methodist Church, officiated. The bride wore a gown of white georgette and carried a bouquet of bride's roses and lilies of the valley. Her cousin, Miss Hazel Evans of Ironton, Mo., was her only attendant. She wore a gown of gray georgette and carried pink roses and sweet peas. Harry Buddie of Memphis, brother of the bridegroom, served as best man. A reception was held after the ceremony. The couple will make their home in Memphis.

Mrs. Arthur Sherman of 6328 Northwood avenue, announces the marriage of her daughter, Mrs. Mary Mullen, to Lee Campbell, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Campbell of 6258 Enright avenue, Saturday, Feb. 27.

The play is an expression of the religious agitation following the crusades. Alphonse McMahon is Guido, the young noble; Gustavus Tuckerman the Heretic; Daniel Bartlett the Jailer; Samuel Goddard the Roaring Pirate, and Mrs. Arthur Proetz the Young Page. Mrs. Bennett Clark will play the incidental music writer for the play by the Southern composer, Winter Watts. At the close of the play Mrs. J. Forbes Johnson, chairman of the Music Appreciation Class, will introduce Mrs. Robert Atkinson, who will speak on "Modern Music." Mrs. Josephine Carradine Dixon, pianiste, will offer a group of selections.

For the last Woman's Hour Radio program, arranged by the club for this year, to be broadcast from station KSD, Thursday, at 4 p. m., a varied entertainment will be offered. "A Bit of Child Philosophy in Song, Story and Verse" will be given by Mrs. Bessie Bonn Ricker, and a group of piano solos by Miss Katherine Carmichael. Miss Temple Bailey, a St. Louis writer, will speak on "Why Authors Write," and Mrs. E. W. Pattison will tell of interesting things "On the Air in Africa." The program will close with "Wednesday Club, Signing Off," by Mrs. Henry S. Butler, first vice president, and Mrs. A. V. L. Brokaw, chairman of the civics committee.

An open meeting of the Jefferson Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, was held Monday at the home of Mrs. Charles E. Richardson, 6034 West Cabanne place. Mrs. J. Harold Sheehan and Mrs. F. W. Sanger were the assistant hostesses. Valuable information was given the delegates who will attend the Continental Congress next month, and explanations of the bond issue for building the new Constitutional Hall in Washington were read.

The Jefferson Chapter expects to send eight representatives, besides the regent, and to purchase $1800 worth of bonds. After the business session, Miss Elizabeth Morse gave a number of recitations.

The American Homes Committee of the Eighth District, M. F. W. C., will meet Wednesday at 10:30 a. m. in the board of education assembly room. Hal Lynch Jr., president of the Architects' Small House Service Bureau, will speak on "The Architect and the Home."

The literary section of the Scottish Rite Woman's Club will hold its monthly meeting Tuesday at 2:30 p. m. in the Scottish Rite Cathedral, 3637 Lindell boulevard. Mrs. O. L. Herlinger, chairman, will preside. Mrs. R. C. Fagley, as leader for the day, will be in charge of the program. This will be a continuation of the section's study of American novelists, and roll-call responses will be excerpts from current comment on present-day novelists. Musical numbers will be given by Mrs. E. B. Vater, a member of the section, who will sing "Images in the Water," by Zeeknerk; "March Winds," by McDowell, and "The Earl King," by Schubert-Liszt.

The literary address will be by Cyril Clemens, a cousin of Missouri's famous humorist. His subject will be "Mark Twain." He will speak of Samuel L. GET RID OF YOUR FAT

Thousands of others have gotten rid of theirs by my simple and efficient method of fat reduction without starvation diet or burdensome exercise, often at a very rapid rate and WITHOUT PAYMENT until reduction has taken place.

I am a licensed practicing physician and have made a careful study of the physiological requirements of the human body. This has enabled me to select such ingredients and in such proportion as in my opinion will produce not only a loss of weight without harm and an improvement in health, but with it an alleviation of all of the troublesome symptoms which frequently accompany and often are a direct result of overstoutness, such as shortness of breath on slight exertion, palpitation of the heart, etc., not to speak of the relief from the embarrassment of being too stout. Stout persons suffering from such diseases as Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Eczema, Asthma and high blood pressure are greatly relieved by a reduction of their superfluous fat.

My treatment will relieve that depressed, tired, sleepy feeling, giving you the renewed energy and vigor which come as a result of the loss of superfluous fat.

If you are overstout do not postpone but sit down right now and send for my FREE TRIAL TREATMENT and my plan whereby I am to be PAID ONLY AFTER REDUCTION HAS TAKEN PLACE if you so desire.

FELLOW PRELATES UPHOLD HONOR OF BISHOP BAST

Declare Danish Verdict Against Him Was Technical and Unjust.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, March 20.—Bishop Blake of Paris and Bishop Nuelson of Switzerland, in a cablegram today to the Board of Foreign Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church, said the verdict against Bishop Bast in Copenhagen was "a technical victory for the prosecution but a moral victory for the Bishop."

They said the verdict was considered decidedly unjust and declared the church had "every reason for fullest confidence in the Christian character and moral honor of Bishop Bast."

"Bishop Bast was acquitted on all charges involving financial irregularity," the message stated. "He was found guilty and sentenced to three months' imprisonment for technically violating the law in 1916 in appealing to the public to buy 'The Lighthouse,' a magazine published by the Bishop, and help the Central Mission.

"The Lighthouse was the Bishop's private property and its profits accrued to him personally, but the profits were devoted to the Central Mission by him."

Mrs. Charlotte Burton Stockton, concert violinist and former director of the violin department at Howard-Payne College, gave a novel lecture on music at a meeting of the Carpe Diem Literary Club Monday afternoon, March 15, at the home of Mrs. Duane Holmes, 1409 Rankin boulevard.

Assisted by Miss Elaine Evans, pianiste, Mrs. Stockton demonstrated the changes which have taken place in musical forms from the time of Bach to the present day. Whereas the technical language necessary to describe the intricacies of harmonic structures—cadences, rhythms, and contrapuntal effects—might have conveyed little to the lay audience, Mrs. Stockton and Miss Evans in their journey from Bach to jazz, used violin and piano to drive home their points. Among the numbers used in the lecture were "Canto Amoroso," showing the strict form used by Samartinni in his seventeenth century love song; "The Golliwog's Cakewalk," in which Debussy made the piano depict the queer thing that a tadpole's cakewalk must be; and "From a Cane Brake," a number typical of the modern trend in music.

Mrs. Charles Oesterle presided at the meeting. The subject for the day being "Music," members responded to roll call with the name of a favorite song. Election of officers will be held at the next meeting, March 29, at the home of Mrs. A. Horst, Moreland road, Kirkwood.

The March meeting of the Story Tellers' League was held Tuesday evening at the Cabanne Library. A program of fairy stories and folk tales was given. Mrs. Georgia McAdams Clifford presided. The following stories were told: "The Legend of the Moon Flower," Miss Idaree Hopkins; "The Star Festival," Miss Anne Vogler; "The Fat Princess," Miss Genevieve Penny; "The Knights of the Silver Shield," Henry Fife Woodward; "Alexander Jones," Miss Marian Goodin; "Little Sister Kindness," Miss Ivy Heideman. Miss Louise Evers, cellist, and E. L. McFadden, pianist, gave several musical numbers. The next meeting of the Story Tellers League will be held April 20.

The St. Louis Shakspeare Drama Study Club will hold its regular meeting Thursday at Lindell Hall School, 4146 Lindell boulevard. The interpretation of the Shakspearean play, "The Tempest," will be continued under the leadership of Mrs. Donald MacDonald, and a musical program will be given by Miss Ernestine Hoeltman.

The Earnest Endeavor Club, Missouri Federation of Women's Clubs, met Monday at 1:30 p. m. in Vandervoorts auditorium. Mrs. J. S. Wilson presided. Members responded to roll-call with interesting current events, and the regular parliamentary drill was conducted by the instructor, Mrs. Fred Armstrong.

Eighth District M. F. W. C. committee reports were made by Mrs. Harry D. Heltzell on Music, Mrs. William F. Storck on International Relations, Mrs. Fred Armstrong on Legislation and Mrs. Gordon Z. Davis on Press and Publicity.

The annual business meeting and election of officers will be held Monday, April 5, at 1:30 p. m.

Mrs. Donald MacDonald will continue her lessons on "The Tempest" Tuesday at 2 p. m. in Vandervoort music hall before the study class of the Tercentenary Shakspeare Society. At the previous meeting Act 1, Scene 1 and part of Scene 2 was studied in detail.

The Iota Delphin Chapter will meet Thursday. The topic will be "Dramatic Instincts and the Earliest Real Drama."

Health Questions Answered

By Dr. Lewis Baker and Associates

An Advertisement Informing the Public in a Common-sense Manner How to Distinguish the Simpler Ailments and Symptoms, and the Right Remedies for Treatment. Each Medicine Possesses the Highest Qualities for the Purpose Intended.

When the kidneys fail to function perfectly, certain symptoms usually serve as a warning, particularly in men and women past middle life. Sometimes, small crystals form in the tubules of the kidneys, creating irritation and producing the sensation of "Backache." Often these crystals are formed in the bladder, producing pains and irritation very annoying to the person and disturbing the nights sleep and rest, required to renew energy.

For such trouble I recommend a compound of diuretic, soothing, sedative agents, Balmwort Tablets which act promptly in almost every case. Balmwort tablets exert a wholesome beneficial influence on the kidneys and bladder and generally the benefits are lasting.

Mrs. K. L. B. asks: "I have had rheumatism for over a year. Aching stiffness and soreness keeps me confined, and being unable to do housework, please advise at once."

Answer: I advise that you try Cardiol tablets for a month or two, taking regularly as per directions. This tablet in my opinion is unequalled for the uncomplicated rheumatic affections. Free-grade Sulphol tablets afford quick pain relief and may be taken with Cardiol tablets as needed.

R. B. J. writes: "I have a trembling of the nerves and a 'shaky' sensation in arms and legs which annoys me greatly. I am in a nervous, run-down state, with poor appetite. Don't sleep well and am both weak and easily irritated all the time."

Answer: If constipation is one source of your trouble, take Sulpherb tablets as a liver and bowel tonic, while taking Cadomene tablets as a tonic for the blood and nerves. They may be taken at the same time.

N. S. M. asks: "Frequently in the morning I am covered with hives which itch terribly. I am troubled with constipation and pimples (Acne) on face and neck. Is my blood impure?"

Answer: Poisons due to retention of waste matter in the bowels give rise to skin troubles, pimples (acne), hives, etc. I recommend the continued use of Sulpherb tablets.

K. B. writes: "I read a letter of a Detroit lady who reduced 32 pounds by using a remedy which you recommended several years ago, but I have forgotten the name now that I have decided to try it."

Answer: The name of the preparation is Arbolene tablets. It may be procured of leading druggists and often proves effective when other medical treatment does not.

Mrs. A. C. writes: "My two children have been out of school for two weeks because of a severe cold and cough. Nothing we have used has seemed to help them and I write for advice."

Answer: Obtain essence Mentho-Laxene and dilute it with sugar syrup or honey. Give this to your children every hour or two. This is being used by thousands of mothers, because it is quickly effective and contains no opiates, chloroform, or narcotics to upset the little stomachs.

R. L. J. writes: "I am suffering with terrible rheumatism pain and want a safe relief without morphine or kindred drugs."

Answer: Ask druggist for 5-grain Su-thol tablets (pronounced soothe-all). Contain no opiates or narcotics, but act quickly in relieving pain, headache, etc.

Answer to Many: So many write asking for a good laxative to counteract constipation, I think the most perfect is to be found in Casca-Royal Pills, as their action is pleasant and does not cease to be effective.

Answer to Miss R. C.: Perspiration odors, armpit odors, foot odors, are readily banished and prevented by the regular use of medicated Chex soap for toilet and bath. It has elusive fragrance, but no medical odor, is beautifying to the skin because of its high quality and unusual medication.

Answer to A. B.: For nasal catarrh apply Mentho-Laxene Salve in nostrils morning and night. This salve is useful in preventing colds in the head and should have a place in every home.

Note: Dr. Lewis Baker, Medical Director of the Blackburn Products Co., 312 College Bldg., Dayton, Ohio, will send his valuable guide to Health and Beauty, to any address upon receipt of 10cts. coin. The trustworthy medicines advised, can be obtained of all leading druggists.

Dr. Baker is known to millions, and the esteem in which he is held is evidenced by the scores of grateful letters received daily, similar to the following:

LETTERS TO DR. BAKER

Sulpherb Drives Pimples Away

BINGHAMTON, N. Y., Master Isadore Zlinsky, 1 Rogers St., writes: "I am writing of the benefits I received from using Sulpherb Tablets, and I recommend them to all who suffer from pimples (acne), boils, constipation, etc. In the last two years my face was badly covered with pimples and my blood was poor. I read about Sulpherb and when I had finished the second box my pimples had disappeared entirely. I ate better and seemed to be getting along wonderfully, etc."

• • •

Nasal Catarrh Benefited

PATERSON, N. J., Mrs. A. Zimlingham, 547 E. 22d St., writes: "The children and myself are using Mentho-Laxene Salve for nasal catarrh and we breathe much more freely, etc."

Common Trouble Corrected

NEWARK, N. J., Mrs. J. E. White, 54 Chestnut St., writes: "I am a women over forty. Was troubled with bladder and kidney ailments. After taking two large boxes of Balmwort Tablets I felt very much benefited and wish to recommend it, etc."

Rheumatic Poisons Eliminated

NEW YORK CITY, Michael W. Tauffe, care Schubert, 160 E. 94th St., a court officer of the Supreme Court, of the state of New York, writes: "About five years ago my appetite began to grow gradually weaker and weaker, notwithstanding presumably competent professional treatment. I next found specks floating in my vision, heavy dark circles came under my eyes; my eyes grew noticeably dull; the proverbal 'dark brown taste' with a considerable coating of the tongue came; pain in the back and both hips came, and a general languid feeling seized me. A colleague of mine advised me to try Cardiol Tablets. That was last April. Since then I have used them faithfully and I now feel like a 'new man'. No other way of expressing it, etc." (Cardiol Tablets stimulated kidneys, liver and bowels, thus overcoming rheumatic poisons, etc.)

Casca-Royal Pills—Laxative

CHICAGO, Ill., Bernhard Thelon, 641 Briar Place, writes: "Before using Casca-Royal Pills, my bowels moved only once in 4 or 5 days. My stomach seemed like lead and full of gas. Now I have two movements daily and no pain or cramps, and costs less than a cent a day. I never used anything half as good, etc."

Tonic-Medicine Brought Strength

NEW YORK CITY, Mr. E. Prete, 119 W. 15th St., writes: "I am 21 years old and married. Working as a waiter and for a long time suffering indigestion, I became all run down. After using Cadomene tablets, I can be on my feet 12 hours, go home and feel like enjoying life. Before I took Cadomene tablets I would be all in and could not even talk to my wife. Now my wife tells me I look like a young man again and full of pep, etc."

Chex Soap—"Above Any"

WACO, TEXAS: A Physician endorses Chex as follows: "We find Chex to be a high-grade toilet and deodorant soap and think no better could be made. By test it is far above any we have ever used, etc."

NEW YORK CITY, Michael W. Tauffe, care Schubert, 160 E. 94th St., a court officer of the Supreme Court, of the state of New York, writes: "About five years ago my appetite began to grow gradually weaker and weaker, notwithstanding presumably competent professional treatment. I next found specks floating in my vision; heavy dark circles came under my eyes; my eyes grew noticeably dull; the proverbal 'dark brown taste' with a considerable coating of the tongue came; pain in the back and both hips came, and a general languid feeling seized me. A colleague of mine advised me to try Cardiol Tablets. That was last April. Since then I have used them faithfully and I now feel like a 'new man.' No other way of expressing it, etc." (Cardiol Tablets stimulated kidneys, liver and bowels, thus overcoming rheumatic poisons, etc.)

Night Coughing Relieved At Once

Why suffer continually from a persistent, weakening night cough when you can get almost instant relief, and usually break the cough completely in 24 hours by a new method based on the famous Dr. King's New Discovery?

Here is the method: You simply take one teaspoonful and hold it in your throat for 15 or 20 seconds before swallowing it. It has a double action. It not only soothes and heals irritation, but also removes the phlegm and congestion which are the real cause of the coughing. As a result even the worst cough usually disappears quickly.

Dr. King's New Discovery is for coughs, chest colds, bronchitis, spasmodic croup, etc. Fine for children, too—no harmful drugs. Very economical, as the dose is only one teaspoonful. At all good druggists. Ask for

COLD BLOODED FACTS vs. WARM-BLOODED FICTION

If we can (we do; ask our customers) sell you cars with MOTORS not merely tuned to do one more thousand miles, but COMPLETELY REBUILT cars with new LACQUER, or without scratches on their original finish; cars with tires good enough to go three, four or five thousand miles more; cars fully RE-SERVICED in every detail at FAIR, HONEST PRICES—not the absurd, meaningless, almost-for-nothing prices so often quoted as a sole excuse to foist questionable values onto the unwary—

If we can (we again refer you to our customers) and do make these guarantees to you, in fairness to yourself you should inspect our stock first, before making purchase, in the hope of saving (?) a few dollars on an investment planned to give you pleasure for a year or two to come.

Below we list a few of the several we now have on hand. All can be purchased on the new G. M. A. C. terms, which makes their purchase easy.

Unused Transportation

Cadillacs . . . and other fine makes . . . with many years of good looks and service still in them. We do not profit on these exchanged cars. They are sold at the same prices that we allowed for them.

Here's a 1924, 7-pass. Cadillac Sedan, for example. You can save $1970 on it. This car has gone only 14,000 miles of city driving. Side by side with a new car from the factory, it's doubtful if you could tell the difference. It's typical of the values "at the head of Auto Row."

Or a SPORT MARMON—grey with dark orange stripes; 6 red wire wheels; nickeled radiator and lamps; black top, natural wood braces; trunk on rear—low, stylish, powerful looking.

20-STORY $5,000,000 HOTEL FOR SOUTHWEST CORNER OF LINDELL BLVD., SPRING AVE.

Preston J. Bradshaw, Architect, Announces the Plans for 250-Apartment Building to Include a Small Theater.

By Berry Moore.

A 20-story apartment hotel, with roof garden, is to be erected at the southwest corner of Lindell boulevard and Spring avenue, at an estimated cost of $5,000,000. Announcement of the plans was made last night by Preston J. Bradshaw, who recently purchased the site, on behalf of a syndicate which will erect the hotel.

Bradshaw is now perfecting plans for the structure, in which he will have a proprietary interest. It will contain about 250 apartments, with bath and shower, available for either hotel or apartment use. Among other features, the plans include an intimate theater for stage performances, with a seating capacity of not more than 900, and a swimming pool on a large scale.

Bradshaw said that further details of the project would be made known after the plans have been completed and approved.

The site has a frontage on Lindell boulevard of 177 feet by a depth of 235 feet on Spring avenue and is of noteworthy prominence. It was formerly occupied by the Catherine Springer home of the Queen's Daughters, which was destroyed by fire.

The site is opposite the Coronado Hotel, which was erected by Bradshaw, and which is being enlarged with an addition on the Lindell boulevard side. St. Peter's Episcopal Church is across Spring avenue from the site.

By its height the proposed structure will set a new standard in the district west of Grand boulevard.

Bradshaw is the architect of the Chase, Coronado, Melbourne and Mayfair Hotels and of the new Brown Hotel in Louisville.

The site was purchased several weeks ago through the Henry Hiemens Realty Co., in connection with Le Grand Jones, representing Bradshaw.

City Arranges to Buy Property.

Arrangements have been completed by which the City of St. Lou's will acquire by private contract the southwest corner of Twelfth boulevard and Pine street and the property at 1316 Olive street, from Frank Dubinsky, president of the Dubinsky Realty Co., who recently purchased it from the Hill estate.

The former parcel has a frontage on Twelfth of 30 feet by a depth on Pine of 109 feet, and the latter a frontage on Olive of 25 feet by a depth of 109 feet, with improvements of nominal value. Both pieces are in the district to be used for the Memorial Plaza, and will be acquired under an ordinance with this provision. A total of $112,000 was paid for the two holdings.

These were among six parcels procured in this district, purchases of which were approved by the Citizens' Bond Issue Supervisory Committee during the week. The Comptroller is acquiring as much as possible of the proposed Memorial Plaza site by direct purchase rather than by the tedious process of condemnation under a $500,000 bond issue item.

Another transaction was the acquisition by the Police Board of a site at the southwest corner of Twelfth boulevard and Clark avenue for a new building. It runs from Clark to Spruce street on the east side of Twelfth and 296 feet east on Clark and 180 feet west on Spruce. It was assembled through the Hemmelman-Spackler Real Estate Co. from 18 owners. New headquarters for the Police Department was made necessary by the decision to widen Twelfth boulevard from Market street south to the viaduct, which will take 40 feet off the east side.

Good Spring Business Seen.

The spirited fashion with which buyers have responded to the weather of the last week is regarded as assuring a large volume of spring real estate business.

Transactions in apartments and semibusiness blocks, which form objects of investment, continue to lead buoyancy to the situation. Contracts were closed during the week for a number of buildings of these types without a suggestion of forced liquidation. Absorptive power of St. Louis for such buildings is evident from the fact that many of them are rented largely before completion.

As an instance, 75 per cent of the units have been leased in the Kenrick Square Apartments, a seven-story structure being erected on Lindell boulevard and Vandeventer avenue by the P. J. Cornwell Realty Co. Fifty families already are in the building.

The fact that construction of apartments has been curtailed very perceptibly has improved the value of investments in new buildings, according to realtors.

Several important deals in the central business district are being negotiated. One of these contemplates a tall office building for the wedge-shaped block at Lindell boulevard, Olive street and Theresa avenue.

Several leases were concluded during the week through Isaac T. Cook & Co., one for an entire floor in the Ambassador Building under construction at Seventh and Locust streets. Details are given elsewhere.

Activity in County Real Estate.

The advent of spring was marked by a renewed demand for tracts in the county, home site seekers, speculators and investors vieing with one another in this field. With the city about to engulf the county, ued to depletion of available sites for homes, to say nothing of apartments, operations in the outlying territory should set new records. Apartment house construction outside the city limits now is in larger volume than in the city. Unrestricted ground in University City is undergoing swift absorption for apartments and flats.

There is a demand for one-acre tracts in the county that cannot be met, because the majority of subdivisions are in three and five acre tracts, virtually barring moderate-priced homes, according to the Eggers Realty and Investment Co., which reports several sales in this section.

Bond Issue Boosts Sales.

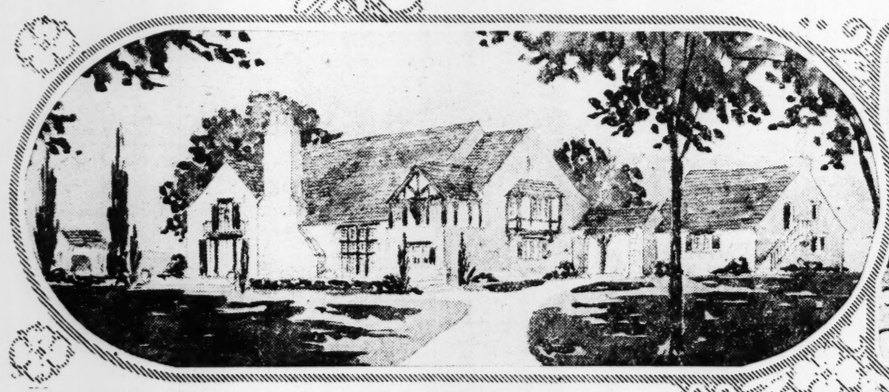
More than $500,000 worth of lots already have been taken by home-seekers, investors and speculators in Osage Hills, formerly Meramec Highlands, which is being converted by Bixby Smith, Inc.

According to Eugene J. Althelmer, the consistent growth of the city and suburbs is due to the fact that St. Louis has never been subject to the adverse effects of a boom, as well as to the conservative policy of the city.

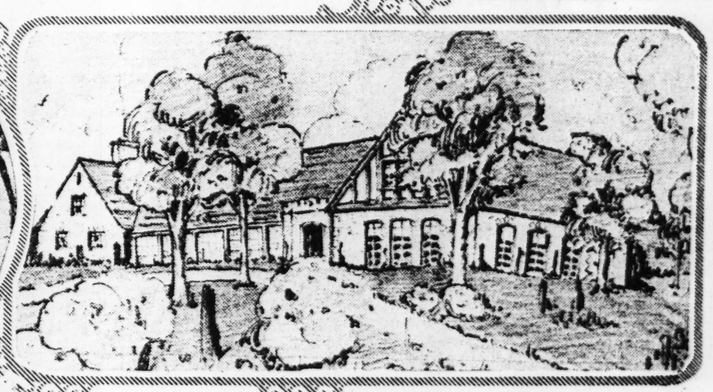
A factor in activity in real estate in the future, especially in the central district east of Grand boulevard, is foreseen in the $87,000,000 bond issue, involving the acquisition of much property for civic improvements.

New City Apartments and Country Homes

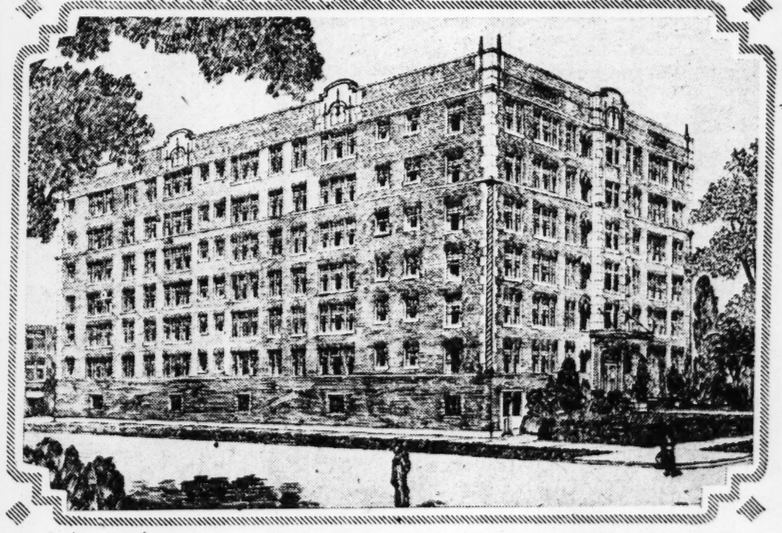
New Kenrick Square Apartments at Lindell boulevard and Vandeventer avenue, which will be completed April 1, and in which 50 families are now living.



Low, rambling English type house being erected for E. A. O'Donnell on the north side of Ladue road, west of the Price road. Maritz & Young, architects.



Building for Osage Country Club, a new organization at Big Bend road and the Meramec River in Osage Hills. Beverley T. Nelson, architect.



New Gotham Apartments at the southwest corner of Enright and Hamilton avenues.

LEASES REPORTED BY MULLIN-WALTERS CO.

Mullin-Walters Realty Co. reports a lease on the first floor of the Funston apartments, 4459 Olive street, to Misses Mary and Margaret Casey, who will occupy it as a dress making establishment. They have been at 4738 McPherson avenue.

Leases also are reported on the storeroom at 2636 Market street to Charles Block for a retail shoe store; the first floor and basement at 1213 Biddle street to J. Capman for a china store; the store room at 1202 North High street to Sam Hutkins.

LOCKWOOD GARDENS FIRST SALE APRIL 11

Announcement is made by Harry Bortin, president of Associated Specialists, Inc., of the completion of plans for the development of the 22 acres formerly known as Kirkwood Park and Armstrong place, in Kirkwood and Glendale, into a community of landscaped homes with playgrounds and parked streets.

Lockwood Gardens is the name of this subdivision and consists of 75 lots varying from 50 to 120 feet front by 120 to 180 feet in depth. The costs of homes in Lockwood Gardens are to vary from $10,000 in the eastern section at Park and Oakland avenues, Glendale, to $25,000 in the western section fronting on Dickson street.

There are several hundred trees in this subdivision, including some 15 different varieties, and it is planned to enhance this woodland setting by landscape work on each lot. The restrictions provide against the use of soft coal.

Six large tracts are reserved for tennis courts and playgrounds, and the plan provides for a caretaker and janitor service for the benefit of all residents and for proper maintenance of the landscaped grounds.

Two courts, parked areas, curved streets and plaza, add to the plan and make possible artistic variations in the types of architecture for each court and section of Lockwood Gardens.

NEW E. A. O'DONNELL HOME IS OF LOW ENGLISH TYPE

The residence of E. A. O'Donnell is being erected on the north side of the Ladue road, west of the Price road, overlooking the St. Louis Country Club.

The building is situated on a 15-acre site, which will be further developed with the homes of several of the owner's friends. It is of a low, rambling English type and has a broad terrace across the entire southern front.

The first floor consists of a two-story living room, dining room, breakfast room, guest room and the usual maids' bedrooms. The second floor contains three master bedrooms and baths.

ONE-ACRE TRACTS TO BE SOLD ON WARSON ROAD

The Eggers Realty and Investment Co. reports the sale of 19 acres of land on the Warson road near the Ladue road to John E. Eggers Jr., trustee for a syndicate, which intends to lay it out into one-acre tracts and to construct moderate-priced homes to be sold on easy terms. There is a tremendous demand for one-acre tracts in the county that cannot be met, because all the present subdivisions are platted into three to five acre tracts. The new subdivision is intended to supply this want.

The company also reports the sale of 7½ acres of land on the St. Charles rock road at Pattonville by James W. Baldwin to Arthur L. Autenrieth. Autenrieth, who has been conducting an outing resort at Meramec Highlands for the last 10 years, intends to open a similar place of amusement on his present purchase.

EQUITABLE LIFE CLOSES LEASE FOR WHOLE FLOOR IN AMBASSADOR BUILDING

Several Storerooms and Other Suites in Structure Under Construction at Seventh and Locust Streets Already Taken.

The Equitable Life Assurance Society has closed a lease with Isaac T. Cook & Co. for the entire fourteenth floor of the New Ambassador Building, under construction at the northeast corner of Seventh and Locust streets.

The lease is given prominence from the fact that absorption of the building has already begun on a large scale at the present stage of construction. Its foreshadows a full occupancy of the building upon completion.

It is stated that the Ambassador was chosen by the Equitable Society primarily because of its adaptability for large executive offices, whose departments must be co-related. With the spacious wings of the building, deep offices are available on either side of the corridor, or in the large open areas. The wide windows available to all exposures constitute another feature, which enhances the desirability for large offices.

The St. Louis branch of the Equitable is one of the most aggressive in the organization, with an increase to its credit in 1925 of 36 per cent over the previous year, according to M. A. Nelson, manager of the St. Louis office. The expanding agency force has made necessary quarters where the organization can be properly accommodated.

Negotiations are pending for other leases in this building, with interest in single offices as well as in suites. The first seven floors of the building will be occupied by Skouras Bros. theater, while the ten upper floors will be available for offices. Five high-speed elevators will serve the upper floors. The building, which is scheduled for completion Sept. 1, will be on a highly sumptuous scale.

The Ambassador Building will complete the upbuilding of the Locust street frontage of this block, with the imposing building of the Mercantile Trust Co., occupying the northeast corner of Eighth and Locust streets, extending through to St. Charles street.

Isaac T. Cook & Co., Inc., also reports negotiations for space in the new Paul Brown Building, at Ninth and Olive and Pine streets, and in the Landreth Building at Fourth and Locust streets, both under construction. A number of important leases have been closed for space in both these buildings, but announcements are withheld pending occupancy.

Demand for Leases Downtown Growing

Through Isaac T. Cook & Co., Inc., six stores in the new Paul Brown Building at Ninth and Olive streets have been leased, including one to the Postal Telegraph Co. at 210 North Ninth street. A large Eastern concern is negotiating for the store fronting on Olive street, together with a large area on the second floor. The agency has numerous offers for the store, which is being held for a large tenant.

T. E. Sassin has closed a long-term lease on the store at 417 North Seventh street in the new Ambassador Building, which from a standpoint of fixtures and furnishings promises to be one of the most attractive lingerie and hosiery shops in the city. The building will be completed by Sept. 1. Another shop in the building at 415 North Seventh street was leased to a jewelry firm.

J. M. Barbakos has leased the store at 407 North Seventh street in the same building for a candy shop which he will conduct in connection with his present stores at 717 Washington avenue and 5899 Delmar boulevard.

J. Baris & Son, clothing dealers, have leased the store at 1416 Washington avenue, formerly occupied by Isaac Fallers Sons Co. of Cincinnati, O. This was a sublease for the account of the latter company, who have closed a lease on the store at 1326 Washington avenue, owned by the Fourteenth Street Investment Co.

All parties in these negotiations were represented by Isaac T. Cook & Co., who report a demand for stores in the central business district.

SEVERAL SALES REPORTED BY J. I. EPSTEIN & SON

J. I. Epstein & Son report the sale of the residences at 4972 Eichelberger avenue, with an additional 30 feet, A. J. Kren by Charles H. Harris. This is the last remaining property of 11 acres known as the Jamestown Place subdivision.

The firm also reports the sale of 283.67 feet at the corner of Idsette and Hampton avenues in Woodland Park to Louis L. Horen by the Audrey Realty Co., represented by the Federer Realty Co. This property will be improved with five brick residences and three granite houses.

The firm reports the sale of 4165 Easton avenue to M. Fixman, and the sale to Stephen H. Kelser of 50 feet on the south side of Alamo avenue, the seller being represented by Daly-McCabe Realty Co. The property will be improved with a four-family apartment.

J. M. LEVI & CO. SELLS THIRD AND MARKET BUILDING

J. M. Levi & Co. reports the sale of the four-story building on the corner of Third and Market streets, consisting of 19 offices and two stores, to Bessie Goldstein for B. H. Herzig and others. The purchaser has already begun alterations.

Also the nine-room residence at 5087 Kensington avenue from Jacob Herger, represented by Stanley Epstein, to C. H. Snodell; 10-room residence, 1907 Hickory street, to Dr. S. D. Balauri; 200 feet unimproved property on Penrose street east of Marcus avenue to R. A. Joffern. Improvements will be started on the property.

GROOMS I. A. HEDGES FOR REAL ESTATE HEAD

Isaac A. Hedges is being groomed for the presidency of the St. Louis Real Estate Exchange, with James M. Franciscus, president of the Franciscus Realty Co., as his chief sponsor.

Hedges is an active member of the St. Louis Real Estate Exchange, and has been a prominent figure in real estate circles as manager and custodian of the real estate holdings of Washington University. He took the initiative with the National Association of Real Estate Boards for the removal of the stamp tax from deeds of trust, according to Franciscus.

The election will be held in April. John J. Dowling is now president of the exchange.

Hedges recently returned from a trip to the West Indies.

SPRING BRINGS INCREASE IN PAGEWOOD LOT SALES

Ben Altheimer & Brother Realty Co., agents for Pagewood subdivision, at Page avenue and Woodson road, announce an increase in lot sales during the week which, they state, indicates a large spring sale. During the last few days numerous lot buyers have been on the property, planting trees and shrubbery.

The contractors building on Easton avenue have made considerable headway, due to the spring weather. It is the belief of Altheimer that the first division of Pagewood will be sold out this spring.

MERCANTILE TRUST CO. REPORTS PROPERTY SALES

The Mercantile Trust Co. reports the sale of 2012 Rutger street to a client of the Samuel Silverblatt Real Estate Co.

Also the sale of 4577 Cote Brilliante avenue to a client of the Dubinsky Realty Co.

ALGONQUIN ESTATES

Algonquin Estates came into being because of a large purchase of land some years ago for the home of Edward T. Hall. To further enhance the value and preserve the natural beauty of this stretch of land, fifteen more acres were purchased last Summer, making a picturesque setting for homes of the finer type.

Professor Gabriel Farrand, head of the Architectural Department of Washington University, who was the architect of the Hall's home, has laid out the grounds so as to retain the lovely rolling country and beautiful trees, making estates that include from about one-half an acre to two acres.

You can hardly realize the advantage of investigating now and buying your estate at the predevelopment prices—the most favorable time on a rising market.

To get there, follow Lockwood Avenue to Berry Road, then 3 blocks north to Algonquin Estates.

"I'm quite ashamed to own," says he,
"A master of such cruelty.
What must the neighbors think of him?
As for myself, well, I can swim.
And thanks to little Johnny Stout
I wasn't long in getting out.
But for my master—what disgrace!
How can he ever show his face?"

The Wonderful Stories of "OZ"

by L. Frank Baum

POLYCHROME'S KISS

"OH, YOU really couldn't," protested Ugly to Betsy. "I would be obliged to remove my mask, and when you saw my face, thing could induce you to kiss me, generous as u are."

"Well, as for that," said the little girl, "I needn't e your face at all. Here's my plan: You stay this dark passage, and we'll send away the omes with their torches. Then you'll take off e handkerchief, and I—I'll kiss you."

"This is awfully kind of you, Betsy!" said aggy, gratefully.

"Well, it surely won't kill me," she replied, "and, it makes you and your brother happy, I'm willing take some chances."

So Kaliko ordered the torch-bearers to leave the ssage, which they did by going through the rock ening. Queen Ann and her army also went out; t the others were so interested in Betsy's experi- nt that they remained grouped at the mouth of the passageway. When the big rock swung into place, closing tight the opening, they were left in total darkness.

"Now, then," called Betsy in a cheerful voice, "have you got that handkerchief off your face, Ugly?"

"Yes," he replied.

"Well, where are you, then?" she asked, reaching out her arms.

"Here," said he.

"You'll have to stoop down, you know."

He found her hands and, clasping them in his own, stooped until his face was near to that of the little girl. The others heard a clear, smacking kiss, and then Betsy exclaimed:

"There! I've done it, and it didn't hurt a bit!"

"Tell me, dear brother; is the charm broken?" asked Shaggy.

"I do not know," was the reply. "It may be, or it may not be. I cannot tell."

"Has anyone a match?" inquired Betsy.

"I have several," said Shaggy.

"Then let Ruggedo strike one of them and [illegible] at your brother's face, while we all turn our [illegible] Ruggedo made your brother ugly, so I guess [illegible] can stand the horror of looking at him, if [illegible] charm isn't broken."

Agreeing to this, Ruggedo took the match [illegible] lighted it. He gave one look and then blew [illegible] the match.

"Ugly as ever!" he said with a shudder. "So [illegible] wasn't the kiss of a Mortal Maid, after all."

"Let me try," proposed the Rose Princess, [illegible] her sweet voice. "I am a Mortal Maid who [illegible] once a Fairy. Perhaps my kiss will break [illegible] charm."

Files did not wholly approve of this, but he [illegible] too generous to interfere. So the Rose Princess [illegible] felt her way through the darkness to Shaggy's [illegible] brother and kissed him.

Ruggedo struck another match, while they all turned away.

"No," announced the former King; "that didn't break the charm, either. It must be the kiss of a Fairy that is required—or else my memory has failed me altogether."

"Polly," said Betsy, pleadingly, "won't you try?"

"Of course I will!" answered Polychrome, with a merry laugh. "I've never kissed a mortal man in all the thousands of years I have existed, but I'll do it to please our faithful Shaggy Man, whose unselfish affection for his ugly brother deserves to be rewarded."

Even as Polychrome was speaking she tripped lightly to the side of the Ugly One and quickly touched his cheek with her lips.

"Oh, thank you—thank you!" he fervently cried. "I've changed this time, I know. I can feel it! I'm different. Shaggy—dear Shaggy—I am myself again!"

Files, who was near the opening, touched the spring that released the big rock and it suddenly swung backward and let in a flood of daylight.

Everyone stood motionless, staring hard at Shaggy's brother, who, no longer masked by the polka-dot handkerchief, met their gaze with a glad smile.

"Well," said Shaggy Man, breaking the silence at last and drawing a long, deep breath of satisfaction, "you are no longer the Ugly One, my dear brother; but, to be entirely frank with you, the face that belongs to you is no more handsome than it ought to be."

"I think he's rather good-looking," remarked Betsy, gazing at the man critically.

"In comparison with what he was," said King Kaliko, "he is really beautiful. You, who never beheld his ugliness, may not understand that; but it was my misfortune to look at the Ugly One many times, and I say again that, in comparison with what he was, the man is now beautiful."

"All right," returned Betsy briskly, "we'll take your word for it, Kaliko. And now let us get out of this tunnel and into the world again."

It did not take them long to regain the royal cavern of the Gnome King, where Kaliko ordered served to them the nicest refreshments the place afforded.

Ruggedo had come trailing along after the rest of the party and while no one paid any attention to the old King they did not offer any objection to his presence or command him to leave them. He looked fearfully to see if the eggs were still guarding the entrance, but they had now disappeared; so he crept into the cavern after the others and humbly squatted down in a corner of the room.

There Betsy discovered him. All of the little girl's companions were now so happy at the success of Shaggy's quest for his brother, and the laughter and merriment seemed so general, that Betsy's heart softened toward the friendless old man who had once been their bitter enemy, and she carried to him some of the food and drink.

Ruggedo's eyes filled with tears at this unexpected kindness. He took the child's hand in his own and pressed it gratefully.

"Look here, Kaliko," said Betsy, addressing the new King, "what's the use of being hard on Ruggedo? All his magic power is gone, so he can't do any more harm, and I'm sure he's sorry he acted so badly to everybody."

"Are you?" asked Kaliko, looking down at his former master.

"I am," said Ruggedo. "The girl speaks truly. I'm sorry and I'm harmless. I don't want to wander through the wide world, on top of the ground, for I'm a gnome. No gnome can ever be happy any place but underground."

"That being the case," said Kaliko, "I will let you stay here as long as you behave yourself; but, if you try to act badly again, I shall drive you out, as Tititi-Hoocho has commanded, and you'll have to wander."

"Never fear. I'll behave," promised Ruggedo.

"It is hard work being a King, and harder still to a good King. But now that I am a common ome, I am sure I can lead a blameless life."

They were all pleased to hear this and to know at Ruggedo had really reformed.

"I hope he'll keep his word," whispered Betsy Shaggy; "but if he gets bad again we will be far away from the Gnome Kingdom and Kaliko will have to 'tend to the old gnome himself."

Polychrome had been a little restless during the last hour or two. The lovely Daughter of the Rainbow knew that she had now done all in her power to assist her earth friends, and so she began to long for her sky home.

"I think," she said, after listening intently, "that it is beginning to rain. The Rain King is my uncle, you know, and perhaps he has read my thoughts and is going to help me. Anyway, I must take a look at the sky and make sure."

So she jumped up and ran through the passage to the outer entrance, and they all followed after her and grouped themselves on a ledge of the mountainside. Sure enough, dark clouds had filled the sky and a slow, drizzling rain had set in.

"It can't last for long," said Shaggy, looking upward, "and when it stops we

Betsy didn't look at the sky; she looked at Polychrome, whose happy, smiling face surely foretold the coming of her father to take her to the Cloud Palaces. A moment later a gleam of sunshine flooded the mountain and a gorgeous Rainbow appeared.

With a cry of gladness Polychrome sprang upon a point of rock and held out her arms. Straightway the Rainbow descended until its end was at her very feet, when, with a graceful leap, she sprang upon it and was at once clasped in the arms of her radiant sisters, the Daughters of the Rainbow. But Polychrome released herself to lean over the edge of the glowing arch and nod, and smile and throw a dozen kisses to her late comrades.

Mystery of the Swimming Hole

By FRANK A. SECORD.

"Hi," Jake Cross called, gasping at sight of the queer formations, "what the dickens are they, fellows?"

when the hole was filled with happy, shouting boys, of a sudden, over to one among the shadows, an arrow-shaped soon spied by a boy and he, pointing to to his companions, "See, kids! There's mocassins now. Little sneaky muskrat home. Lookee!"

Musky! Here Musky!" called another owd, snapping his fingers toward the

"Well, what about them?" Billy West inquired, turning for one more look at the beloved hole, from which he was hurrying.

"Mocassins, as sure as you're born!" Jake answered hollowly.

"Forgot my knife!" whimpered another lad, feverishly chugging his hands into the pockets of his pants. "I had it out to cut off a shoe lace knot and left it on the ground yonder."

"Well, go get it!" someone in the crowd suggested.

"Who'll go with me?"

"As nobody cares about your old knife, nobody will go back and take a chance with a dozen mocassins sneaking through the grass!" Jake Cross growled.

"I'll go, you bet!" cried the youth. He had not more than reached the place where himself and chums had undressed for their swim before something stirred in the grass and away he bolted, crying at the top of his voice:

"Mocassins!"

As the boy shouted the one terrifying word, from the creek's vicinity came over the evening air a cry of distress and fear, that struck terror to the hearts of all of Jake Cross' crowd. "Help! Help! I'm bitten by a mocassin!" the voice shouted and Jake and companions stood mute and shaking with fright. None dare return to the aid of whoever might be calling, for the exclamation of their own chum who had been scared half out of his wits by a moving object in the grass, broke whatever courage they had left, after seeing the many wedge-waves in the swimming hole.

Jake Cross paled, trembled harder than ever and began counting noses. Chattered he, "Who is missing? I thought we all skedaddled together."

"We're all here—such as we are!" exclaimed one lad and his pale face wearing a sickly smile, could be quite plainly seen in the evening's fading light.

Strangely, there was no repetition of the cry for help yonder.

With heavy hearts and no courage left, Jake Cross' crowd cut over the meadows for town. Every mother's son of them wondered if the shouter for aid was attacked in the water and if he died there. It was a problem to figure out what to do; but when the boys reached town Jake solemnly said:

"Fellows, we are not cowards and it is our duty to tell someone. We will have to say that some poor soul was bitten by a mocassin and that he died and evidently sank before we reached the bank of the creek. That's all I know what to do." And so it came to pass that lots were drawn with straws. The stub straw fell to Jake himself, so that worthy, biting his lips and with troubled mien, silently walked into the home of the school principle and there recited a tale of what happened—according to his version—at the swimming hole. Finished, Jake brushed a tear from an eye and, chugging his cap down over his eyes, departed. He was followed by an exclamation from the man, who observed, "This is serious, I must say. I shall immediately take steps to have the matter sifted."

And so it happened that the town was alarmed quickly and crowds of people prepared to visit the Brandt pasture, armed with everything from a rifle to a pitchfork.

When the investigating populace moved en masse, a bunch of boys might have been seen peeking out of a garage behind Fatty Judson's home. Fatty himself stood with his face glued against a windowpane, and, when he noted the activity of the people, this lad turned to his chums to say:

"Well, kids; it looks as if we have stirred things up pretty generally. I'm afraid we carried it too far."

"Naw!" someone in the bunch growled. "Couldn't."

"I mean," Fatty hastened to explain, "we rather spoiled our scheme. Not that I care about the people being fooled. We haven't gained anything, though."

"Well, they won't find any snake-bitten boy or anyone else," the other speaker growled again.

"No; that's true, but they——"

"What?"

"May find out——"

Turning to his companions, Fatty inquired, "We didn't leave anything back there, did we?"

"Only that frog I tied by a leg in the grass to scare any of the Cross kids if they came back. They may find it," a boy answered.

"I bet," another lad laughed, "none of them will stop to see if a frog is in the grass, tied by a leg, or not. Once they hear the hopper jumping around they'll 'beat it,' believe me. Too much mocassin scare. See?"

The frog referred to was the thing that scared the boy who sought his knife—the boy from the Cross crowd.

The pool in Brandt's pasture lay glassy and very still under the stars and the early moon. Not so much as a msukrat disturbede its surface; therefore, the townspeeople marveled and reluctantly returned to their homes. The question of a bitten person having died and sunk in the swimming hole was discounted. Remarked a man, "That part of the affair, I am convinced, is only a bit of imagination. The boys evidently became so badly frightened at the appearance of the mocassin snakes that they just could believe anything. Further, if there are any mocassins hereabouts I am ready to be convinced, but—"

Just at that instant the man chanced to disturb a tuft of grass under which the frog, tied by a leg, was located; and Mr. Frog hopped as far as the string would admit, flying back rudely when the string became tight. This action took all the argument out of the speaker, and he, jumping straight up as high as he was able, dashed from the spot with a mighty yell of terror. "One struck at me!" he gasped, feeling of his leg to find out if he had been hit, for the greenback actually struck him in its bound.

Fatty Judson's crowd didn't dare go for a dip in Brandt's pasture swimming hole for a long time, and when they did, the town rose in alarm. So the boys had to confess their trick.

With arrow-shaped bits of wood slightly weighted, the boys made the "snakes." To each bit of wood a piece of rope was tied. These crude things were attached to strings and hidden on the opposite side of the hole from where the lads were located, also well hidden in the brush, and when all was ready for the scare, they drew the "snakes," by means of the strings, across the water.

The cry of the supposed person bitten by one of the "reptiles" was only that of one of the Judson gang who remained behind at the pool to carry out that part of the scare.

THE YELLOW DUCK RHYMES

Mrs. Tabby
And her three kittens,
Came out one day
With-out their mittens.

The black-est kit-
Tens one could think!
And Tabby too,
Is black as ink.

Most care-ful-ly
I saw them go,
Dain-ti-ly step-
Ing through the snow.

And then I smiled,
Be-cause I saw,
Each Kit-ten lift
And shake its paw.

"Mew, mew!" one said,
"I don't like snows,
I'm freez-ing all
My twen-ty toes."

"Mew, mew!" the three
Cried out to-gether,
"We all dis-like
This snow-y weather."

"I think," I said,
"Such lit-tle kittens,
Should all be wear-
Ing shoes and mittens."

"I think so too,"
Said Tab-by-Cat,
"They should not run
A-round like that."

"We're go-ing now,"
Said all the kittens,
"Out to the barn,
To get our mittens."

"And our shoes too,"
One stopped to add,
"Then we shall be Quite warm-ly clad."

"What with our furs,
And shoes and mittens
We'll like the snow,"
Said all the kittens.

I looked at them
With great de-light,
Four black spots in
A field of white!

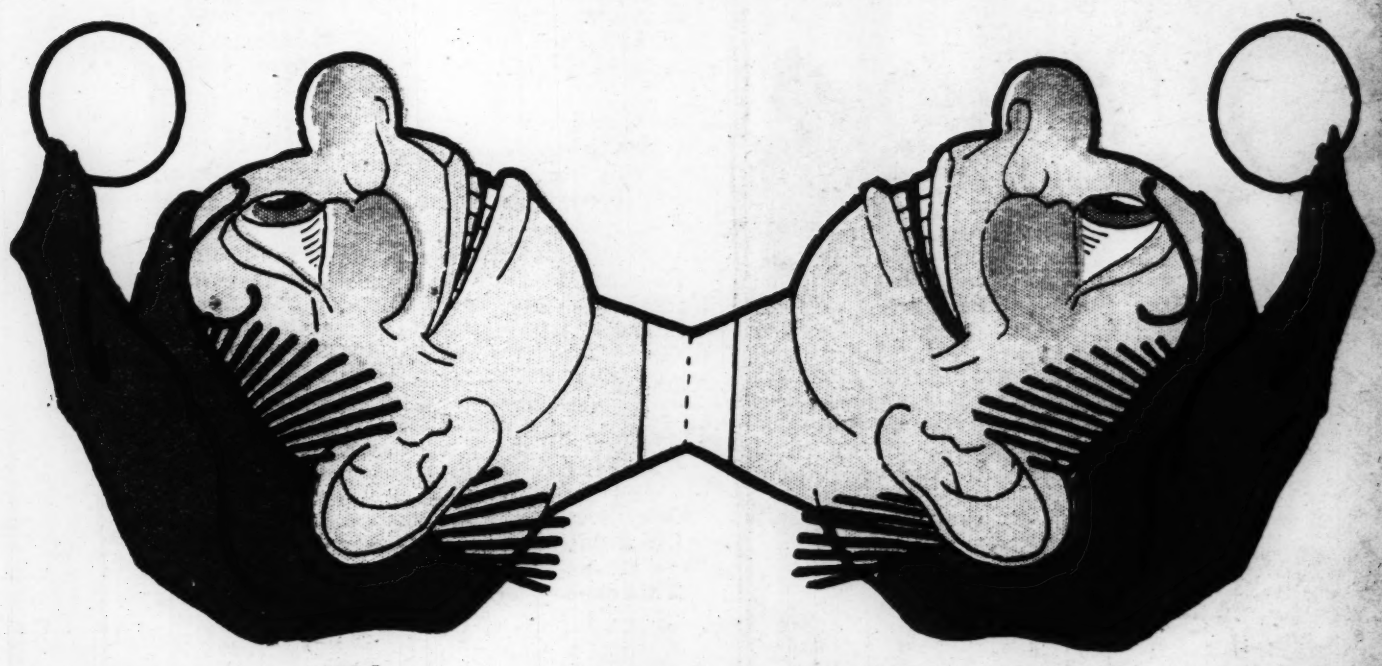
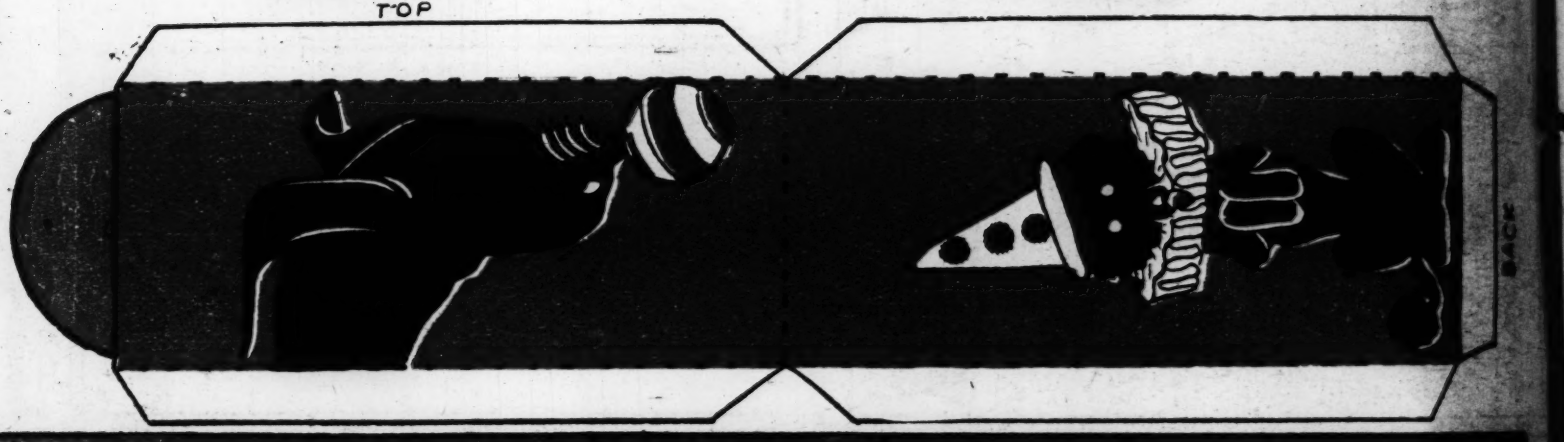
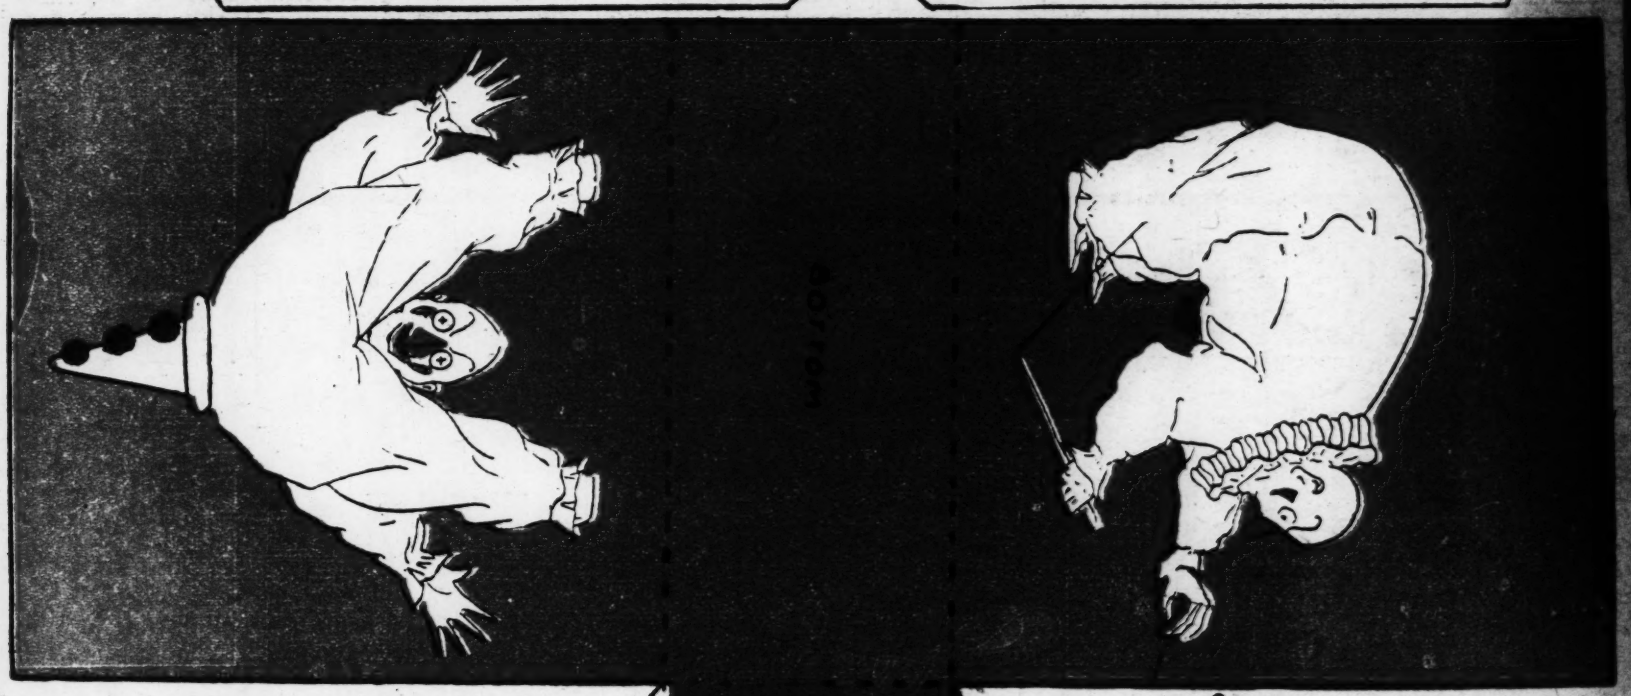
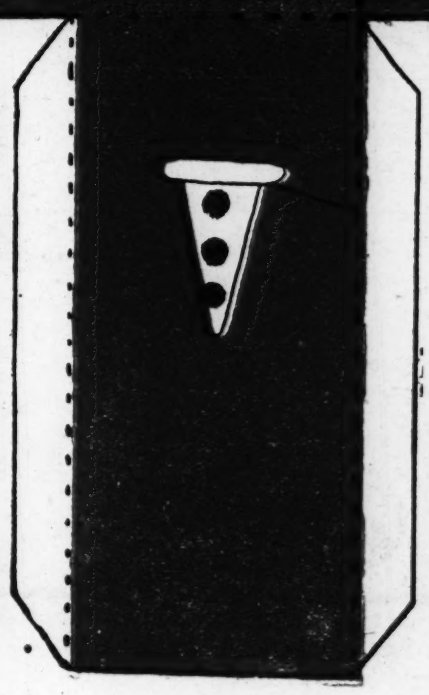
Pop! Here Comes Jack in the Box!









Here's Jack and the box to put him in. You will need besides a long strip of very thin cardboard or stiff paper to make the spring. Use a strip ¾ inch wide and about a foot long. Fold over and over with the folds about an inch apart, but do not crease too hard. Jack's head gets pasted together after you fold the dotted line at the neck inward; crease the other lines, on either side of the dotted line, outward, then stick the end of the strip into the groove thus formed and paste. Paste the box on cardboard and fold on the dotted lines, pasting the flaps inside the box; fasten the cover by sticking a pin through the flap. The folded strip must be pasted firmly to the bottom of the box.

Uncle Henry's Story

Gambler, Soldier, Cowboy, Broncho-Buster, Well-Digger, Circuit Rider, Missionary—Henry Delong—and He Is Starting on Another Adventure.

UNCLE HENRY DELONG, 91 years old, still ready and fit.

By a Post-Dispatch Staff Correspondent.

OMAHA, Nebraska.—"Uncle Henry" Delong, in his ninety-second year, faces what he declares is the greatest adventure of his long life. This aged youth, who trekked across Iowa with Brigham Young when the Mormons were driven from their ill-starred Zion at Nauvoo, Illinois, who herded cattle where Omaha now stands, who was a "square gambler" in the days when Council Bluffs was the northern gateway to the California goldfields, who stampeded to Colorado in the great gold excitement of Pike's Peak, who became a convert, a preacher, a circuit rider, a well-digger, and for 50 years has spent his life as a missionary among the homeless, the friendless and the abused of Council Bluffs, today is planning a mission for old friendless men.

At 91 he deeded his property away to his two sons, Harvey and Henry, keeping a life interest in his old homestead and the little store building adjoining, where for many year he has had a mission and an industrial school. The mission building is to be remodeled as a recreation hall for his companions in the home. Of the homestead at its side, Uncle Henry will make a dormitory for his aged companions. The venture is to be financed by Uncle Henry's income as "the marrying parson" of Council Bluffs, for the aged minister has married something like 6000 couples in his years of service, which reached its high point—if a pun may be permitted—when Uncle Henry at the age of 91 flew in an aeroplane 2500 feet up over the city of Omaha and in the air made Della Decker of Casper, Wyoming, and Fred Ellis Jr. of Omaha man and wife.

In Omaha and Council Bluffs it's quite the thing to have this aged minister officiate at one's marriage. Last year he married 1711 couples and the fees contributed to him were $7075. Quite enough to keep his mission going, for Uncle Henry himself lives on his pension of $50 a month, received as a soldier in the Civil War.

Fascinating as is this new "adventure," it does not compare in general interest to the life story of this man who has lived more stories than half a dozen fiction writers might invent, and who hopes to live for 25 years more that he may make the most of life.

BACK in Brighton, Pennsylvania, he was born in 1834. "Back in those days," he says, "there was a great revival of religion among the masses, in which the Baptists and Methodists led. My father became a Baptist and my mother joined the latter church. Then the people revolted against religion, for the poor folk thought they were left out of Christian consideration by the rich when society began to adjust itself, and that they weren't wanted in the church.

"I remember when a Mormon elder came to our little home preaching, and my mother was his first convert. Their prayer meetings were held in our home. And in 1844 the Mormon folk among us chartered a steamboat on the Ohio River and father sold the little home he hadn't yet quite paid for to come out West and join the Prophet, Joseph Smith, in the Zion he had established at Nauvoo, Illinois.

"We thought—I remember it clearly—that we were going right to heaven. The Prophet was erecting a wonderful limestone temple to the Lord, and Christ himself, so we were taught, was soon to come among us and reign on earth for 1000 years.

"The Mormons were abolitionists, and prohibitionists, and politicians, too, and there were hangers-on, who sought to live off the country and were accused by the gentiles of stealing. This and the deep religious prejudices then existing had caused the Mormons to be driven out of Missouri and now the trouble reached a crisis at Nauvoo and Prophet Smith and his brother Hyrum were set upon by a mob and murdered while they were in jail at Carthage, Illinois. The news came to us at Alton, while the steamboat was on its way up the Mississippi River, and I shall never forget the terror of our band, and the hushed, awed voices with which the tragedy was discussed.

"WE LANDED next day in Nauvoo. They took us to the Temple. My father, my mother and us six children There we saw the prophet and his brother lying in their coffins.

"Father had landed in Nauvoo with 50 cents. He was a carpenter and they put him to work in the Temple. But for his pay he received only half-rations for his family. I was 10 years old and with my older brothers I went out to shoot blackbirds. That was all the meat we had.

"That couldn't last. Father sort of lost his faith. We moved out to a mill, 25 miles in the country, where he got work as millwright. We put up a log cabin. We planted grain. But the gentiles burned us out. We got an old cabin for shelter. People shunned us because we were Mormons. The gentiles hated all the saints. And where we lived it was low and swampy, and it wasn't long until all of us had fever and ague.

"My older brothers had homes with other families. We struggled along somehow. Then my father died, and my younger sister. And neighbors came in and put them in rough boxes, and buried them out in the wilderness, for we were Mormons and would have contaminated their cemeteries. And one night my baby brother died in the arms of my mother, who was helpless in bed herself, with the six-weeks-old baby. I lifted the body to a table, for we were all alone, and the night dragged on, and when the dawn came my mother cried for help and I rushed to her bedside. And she lay lifeless there, and still.

"Mother and sister were buried by the gentiles in the wilderness. My brothers were bound out to the farmers who had kept them. My sister and younger brother to another family. I was given to the care of the Mormon Bishop, Adam Clark.

"The murder of the Prophet and his brother had precipitated a crisis in the Mormon Church. Brigham Young seized the power. He had determined to leave the United States, for he was ordered out of Illinois, and he sought to establish himself in what then was Mexico—what is California now.

"So in March, 1846, Brigham led his followers westward—out into the wilderness of Iowa. We crossed the Mississippi River at Keokuk, and struck westward, out across the prairie, with its wild grass high as a boy's head, and its timbered streams. All summer we traveled.

"Ten thousand of us marched, that summer, with ox-teams and cattle and sheep, but only 6000 of us lived through the journey. I trudged behind Bishop Clark's wagon, driving the sheep and cattle, shaking with ague and burning up with fever, with stone bruises on my bare feet. I had my dog 'Maje' to help me herd the cattle. And there was an orphan lamb that was my pet, and at night I would cuddle it to me as I slept on the bare ground under the wagon.

"When we left Nauvoo there was a Mrs. Mechem, who came with us, but her husband wasn't a Mormon, and stayed behind. Bishop Clark made her his 'spiritual wife.'

"As we pushed on over the wilderness of high grass and wild flowers, we halted upon orders of Brigham Young, and where we halted at the little groves we found, we planted gardens, that were to help feed the saints who came on later. At one of these stops I had the measles and the mumps, and the cold rains fell on me there under the wagon. But Mrs. Mechem helped to nurse me and I pulled through. Then the Bishop pushed on again, but his wife made him leave Mrs. Mechem behind.

"On we trudged, the long, snakelike train of wagons winding over the rolling prairies, on through the month of June while the grass turned from green to ripening yellow, and on July 3, 1846, we halted at Council Bluffs, where already the Mormons had a little city of wagons and tents.

"BUT Iowa while we were marching had entered the Union of the United States, and in the meantime, since we had left Illinois, America had begun its war with Mexico.

"Now Brigham Young had a great plan, and he entered into a treaty with the army and was to furnish them 500 Mormon men who would fight in Mexico and be discharged in Mexico—so that the Government would transport them out to where he wanted to go, and pay them a soldier's wage besides.

"And I remember the morning that they marched off, between 500 and 600 of them. Spare, bronzed men, used to the hardships of pioneering, and sharpshooters, every one.

"And Brigham, himself, had a problem, for with Iowa in the Union, he had to get out. So he leased some land from the friendly Omaha Indians across the river, and built his winter quarters, with wide streets, and dug-outs, sod-houses and log houses, and a great stockade with sharpened palings surrounding the town on three sides and protected by a ditch, while the fourth was defended by the open river. Winter quarters later became Florence, Nebraska, and now is part of Omaha.

"We crossed the river in flatboats the men had made and it took us all morning to cross.

"THAT winter! Right and left we died from exposure, hunger, starvation. At the back of his one-room log house Bishop Clark put the covered wagon he had brought from Illinois, and that was my only bedroom. Often I had to go to bed without my supper. And next morning started out with a yoke of oxen, a boy of 12, to go three miles for wood, which I had to cut myself. The ax was dull, and the weather cold. And once, on the way home I was stupefied with cold, and would have died, I guess, if the oxen hadn't known the way and brought me in in safety.

"'Maje,' my dog, was my bed-fellow. The lamb that had been my pet when we crossed Iowa had grown too big for petting now, and was herself the mother of twin lambs, but they died the night they were born, and I drew the milk from the ewe's udder into a gourd, and I drank half and gave 'Maje' half, and it seems to me that my life was saved by that old sheep.

"Spring came. We broke the sod and planted sod corn and potatoes where we turned the sod over. We ground up our cornstalks when the crop was ripe, in a mill, saving the leaves for fodder and boiling the juice to make molasses from, and corn bread and molasses were our food, eked out with berries and roots, and artichokes we found.

"In the spring of 1848 the Mormon lease on 'Winter Camp' ran out and the Indians were threatening. Most of the Mormons pushed on west. Bishop Clark was left behind, sent back to Council Bluffs to help the others coming from the east along their way.

"I lived on with the Bishop and his wife and two daughters. He'd set a 'stent' of work for me each week. I worked early and late to get it done. Then, maybe it was finished by Friday evening, he'd find something else to do. So it went. I was 16. Christmas came. I wanted to hang up my stocking. His daughters hung theirs and for them there were doll doughnuts and parched corn and such other things as pioneers had to make a festival.

"'No need,' they said, 'to hang up your stocking. There'd only be a hickory switch for you.'

"'If my mother was alive we'd see who got the licking,' I answered. And Bishop Clark heard me. He started to whip me and I ran away. Gentiles had been coming into Council Bluffs. The Mormons were beginning to be afraid. The Bishop mounted his horse and caught me. Two other Mormons stopped him. 'Don't touch that boy,' they said. They had a church trial over the way he had treated me. A gentile offered me a home. The Mormons let me stay with him because of my promise to go out to Salt Lake with them next year. With this gentile, Jonathan Huston, I got my first chance to go to school. I went three months, promising to pay the schoolmaster when I could. I worked for my board. When I went out to work at first I brought in artichokes and other roots that we could eat. Mrs. Huston wanted to know why. When I told her, she cried.

"'You don't have to eat that kind of food with us,' she said.

"EIGHTEEN-FORTY-NINE! California! Gold! Council Bluffs was a gateway to the El Dorado. Gentiles came and stayed. The little town grew and thrived. I didn't want to go to Salt Lake City. I wanted to stay in Council Bluffs, and stay I did, for the Mormon power was broken.

"During the two years at Winter Quarters I had herded cattle all over where Omaha is. I had learned to break horses, too. And now, after a while, I left the Hustons, who were going to keep their word and give me back to the Mormons, and I got a job at $5 a month, breaking mustangs.

"Council Bluffs was called 'Miller's Holler' then. A main street had sprung up and branched off like a 'Y.' Log cabins and other buildings were put up. There was the old 'Pacific Hotel.' There was the 'Ocean Wave' saloon. Pottawattomie braves and Omahas were in the streets, mingled with pioneers in homespun and deerskin garments, trailing through to California, and with them the outcasts that follow the track of immigration, the gamblers, the saloon men, the women of the streets.

"Out into the very streets the gamblers moved, setting up their tables and inviting all strangers to play. And indoors, in the 'Ocean Wave,' the bar was lined with people, stopping to rest and to drink before they pushed on west—taking their last look at civilization.

"There were square gamblers and there were tin-horns. I watched them in the streets, fascinated. These men with a turn of a card made more money than I made in a month of hardest work on a mustang's hurricane deck. One man in particular I watched. His name was Perkins.

"TALL and dark he was, and handsome, with a black mustache, and fine broadcloth clothes. He was a square gambler. Everybody said that. I liked him for his gentlemanly manner.

"I went to him, for I had decided to learn the gambling business. I had married, you see. Five dollars wasn't enough to keep me.

"'My boy,' said Perkins, 'I've been at it 40 years. You stay out of this business. Stay on your job.'

"'But I've made up my mind,' I said, 'that I'm going to learn the gambler's game and I want to learn it square.

"'You've got a horse,' I told him, 'and I'll take care of your horse if you'll teach me your business.'

"Finally he agreed. 'All there is to it,' he said, 'is never bet on the other fellow's game. I'll make you a capper. Your business will be to study men. You hunt them up and bring them over here.

"'Those men will want to drink. Buy them whisky. Buy them all they want. But never drink yourself. If you do, in this business you will land in the poorhouse.'

"So I went to work. I was a good capper. I became a gambler. I was a good gambler, too. I made money. Pretty soon I had a table in the 'Ocean Wave.' That was a gentlemen's saloon. Three years passed.

"There wasn't anything going on at the 'Ocean Wave' one night and a lot of us went down to a revival meeting. I wasn't much more than in the place until I heard a voice saying: 'Henry, what are you doing here?' I believe that was the voice of God. I listened. I wanted to pray. I went forward. I had become a convert.

"I had a high tenor voice, a good voice. I used to lead in the hymns. I used to tell my experiences. People made fun of me. My wife made fun of me. But I had to quit gambling and was making a living as a hostler at the old 'Pacific Hotel.' Then I persuaded my wife, who didn't believe, to go back with me to Macomb, Illinois. With a partner I rented a farm. The partner was a Baptist brother. We had 40 acres in wheat and 30 acres in corn. When we went out to till we'd pray. The rain drowned out the corn. The hot summer burned the wheat. I'd pledged $25 toward a new church. I traded my interest in the crop to the contractor for my pledge. And I got a job cooking for eight men who started out to peddle apple trees through Missouri and then go on to Pike's Peak."

Out near the Colorado line they were when the Pike's Peak excitement "busted." Back came Uncle Henry to Council Bluffs. He joined his wife and toiled, until the Civil War was on.

IN 1864 came a draft. He had his wife and three children. He had had to stay behind and care for them though he, with his Mormon training, was an abolitionist. "I'll give you $1000 if you go in my place," said A. J. Bell, a member of the Iowa Legislature, who was drafted. Uncle Henry went to the bank while he drew the money. He took it home and over her shoulder showered the bills into the lap of his wife. Then he joined the army. They made him company cook. Incidentally he held prayer meetings, for he was a licensed exhorter, and he washed shirts for the other men. His $13 monthly he sent back to his wife. The laundry money he loaned out—often at the rate of $1 for the use of $5 for a month. When the war ended he had $300.

He came back to Council Bluffs. The old "Ocean Wave" saloon had burned down in his absence. Uncle Henry bought the site of the place he had worked as an "honest gambler" and started in to build a church thereon. The church, often remodeled since, now stands on East Broadway.

"It wasn't hard to get the money," he said. "A whole lot of it I got from my old friends, the gamblers." A $15,000 building was erected on the site.

Now he was licensed to preach and joined the Des Moines Methodist conference. He was made a circuit rider. There are seventeen pastors now in the circuit where once he ministered.

"I'm sending you there," said his presiding elder, "because you're the only man I know who can dig yourself out." It was literally true. Uncle Henry had become a well-digger. All day he'd work digging a well for some farmer on his circuit. At night he'd hold a meeting. But the farmer he worked for had to pay him $5 a day for digging and promise to attend the meeting.

His first wife had left him. The circuit rider's duties were too rigorous. Later he married again. Then he and his wife established a mission in the poorer section of Council Bluffs. And with it an industrial school for girls. The children were taught to sew, to make their own clothes.

He became probation officer in Council Bluffs and remained in that non-paying office for years—and in that time kept 1611 cases from getting into the courts.

HIS wife, and helpmeet, died on January 1, 1925. "Uncle Henry" had the habit of writing in a book. The notes from his diary at that time are significant. He wrote:

"January 1, 1925, 5:30 a. m. I am having an experience such as I have never had. Mrs. Delong is slowly passing away. A few hours more and I must go the rest of the way alone. But I cannot write more now, except to say that I shall, by the grace of God, keep my head and heart to the end.

"It is now 8:30 o'clock and the river is between me and the one who made it possible for Uncle Henry to make a success of life. Her life had been one continual sacrifice for others and most of all for the man to whom she gave her life and toil. She died as she slept."

Ninety years old then, and nearing 91. He sought to preach her funeral sermon. "Now, mamma," he said, as he grasped the lifeless hand in the coffin before him, "yesterday I clasped your hand and uttered a prayer which you answered in turn. Today that hand is cold. . . ." He could go no further.

In words, that is, but in deeds "Uncle Henry," nearing 92, still keeps the path. His mission for the aged is founded as a memorial to his wife and helpmeet. This Mormon, gambler, soldier, cowboy, broncho-buster, well-digger, circuit rider and missionary, is starting off again on "the great adventure." And he hopes to live a quarter of a century—at least—to enjoy to its utmost that adventuring.

SOLD to the GYPSIES

Three Thousand Dollars Was the Price Rosa d'Elena Brought When Her Father Handed Her Over to the Gypsy Chieftain in Seville. And in America She Has at Last Found Her Freedom. Now Rosa Tells the Story of Her Life With the Colorful Caravan That Carried Her Through Many of the Towns and Cities of This Country.

ROSA D'ELENA—the little Italian girl who is now to become an American.

Special to the Post-Dispatch Sunday Magazine.

NEWARK, New Jersey.—Seven months of servitude as the purchased slave of a band of Spanish gypsies was the lot which befell Rosa d'Elena, whose father sold her last July to a gypsy king in Seville for the sum of $3000, and who, after wandering with the tribe from Spain to Havana, to Old Mexico, New Orleans and finally to Newark, was abandoned by the gypsies because she would not tell fortunes and refused to steal.

Early last month, clad in the picturesque costume of the Romany women, the pretty little 16-year-old girl was found helplessly wandering about the streets of Newark. A policeman took her to headquarters, where she told a fascinating story of adventure, reminiscent of the Middle Ages, when it was no uncommon thing for a father to sell children into bondage, even as Rosa's father had sold her. After hearing her story, the family of a prominent Newark physician offered to take her into their home. And there she has discarded her gypsy garb for American clothes and is settling down to the task of learning English and acquiring the manners of American girls.

Spanish she speaks well, but she is more at home with Italian, for that is the language of her native Genoa, where she lived with her parents many years before the family moved to Spain. She has coarse black hair and the olive-pink complexion characteristic of her people. Her dark eyes flashed with alternating fury and merriment and she grimaced and gestured with animation when, seated on a luxurious couch in her new home, she told her strange story, through the medium of an interpreter.

ROSA was born in Genoa, one of a family of six boys and girls, and her early childhood was spent with them in the city of the great navigator's birth. Shortly after Rosa's fifteenth birthday her father, Ricciari d'Elena, decided that the family should move to Seville, in Spain. D'Elena was a machinist and work was scarce in Genoa. The family protested against the change, but her father, says Rosa, was a harsh and obdurate man, and since among her people a father's word is law, the family went to Spain.

They settled in Seville and their home was on the edge of the white-walled Spanish city, near a little lake where a mountain stream paused in its wild rush toward the sea. The spot was a favorite camping place for many bands of gypsies in their wanderings between the old and new Spanish capitals.

Usually accompanied by her brothers and sisters, Rosa was a frequent visitor at their camps. Their wild dances to the accompaniment of guitars and their colorful costumes caught the young girl's fancy. The romantic air of these wanderers, whose life seemed based on the philosophy of "eat, drink and be merry," fascinated her and she visited the camp time and again. It was on one of these visits that she came under the coveting eyes of Caesar Sidio, gypsy leader, a lean and swarthy man three times the age of Rosa.

Then followed a session between Caesar and Rosa's father over several bottles of wine in a cool cellar on the plaza. And when D'Elena's harshness was softened by the sparkling liquid, the gypsy chief made him a proposition. At first D'Elena scorned the offer; but the suave gypsy had set his heart on the girl and his persuasions could not be resisted. After all, the move to Seville had not been as profitable as D'Elena had anticipated. And then there were five other children to feed and clothe. The machinist consented. A price was agreed upon, equivalent to $3000 in American money, Rosa said.

"Wasn't that a lot of money for a gypsy to be spending?" she was asked.

"GYPSIES will spend lots of money on something they want," she answered simply. "Provided they want it badly."

The girl's mother objected strenuously to the bargain, Rosa said, but her pleas failed to move the father from his purpose. The sale was consummated, and the girl, much against her will, was turned over to the gypsies. The gypsies then boarded a ship and set sail for Cuba, and Rosa, with several others of the tribe, was smuggled into Havana. Other gypsies joined them there. They went to Mexico and from there entered the United States by way of New Orleans.

Then, says Rosa, the gypsy caravan, including about 50 men and women, began their tour of America. And the modern gypsy does his traveling not on foot or in a dingy wagon, but by means of automobile, and, if you please, the best automobiles available. At New Orleans the gypsies lived in tents on the outskirts of the city. Five large touring cars were purchased—Cadillacs and Packards. Food supplies were bought and the gypsies then set out to explore America.

Rosa was then instructed in the gypsy woman's most important accomplishment, that of "fortune telling," and this accomplishment, according to Rosa, is a complete fraud. One morning, shortly after leaving New Orleans and while the band was encamped near some town, Rosa was called aside for her instruction. Her teachers were two old women, but her master, Caesar Sidio, stood nearby to see that the girl paid proper attention to her elders.

Then she was taught the English words to use on a person desiring to have his fortune told. The victim was first asked to hand over a dollar. Then his palm was read. Rosa demonstrated the "reading." The writer served as her model. "You a nice man. You hand say gooda luck. Somebody you like a-write a letter soon. Letter veree good. Breeng gooda luck. You no worry."

THIS, said Rosa, was only one of the numerous formulas the gypsies used to wheedle dollars from gullible victims. It was, however, the only one Rosa learned, because she refused to go on with her instruction, insisting that the gypsies' pretensions to knowledge of palmistry were false and that their "fortune telling" was dishonest. For this naive observation her lord, Caesar, gave her a sound beating, the two women pulled her hair. She was regarded as an unwelcome member of their troupe.

The gypsies' wrath at her obstinacy, however, is not hard to understand for, according to Rosa, fortune telling was their chief source of income, particularly when they were unable to lay their hands on things belonging to others. Whenever a town was reached, said Rosa, the gypsy women, clad in their best and most colorful raiment, would set out in groups of three or four. If the territory was fertile and the inhabitants were not only gullible but also generous in their spending, a vacant store would be rented as an "office," or a tent would be pitched in town. A sign would be put up announcing that the "past, present and future" could be revealed, and the gypsies were ready for business. If no "office" was established the women would approach anyone they encountered or apply at stores and residences offering to read palms. There was one swindle, said Rosa, which the women used with frequent success. Occasionally an exceedingly gullible woman would be met who placed a great deal of trust in the gypsies' gift of clairvoyancy and who believed implicity in their predictions. Such a woman, obviously pleased with her first "reading," would be promised still greater revelations if she called at the gypsy camp or at the "office" again. She was instructed to bring a five, ten or twenty-dollar bill, the amount depending on her apparent means and credulity.

The woman would then call on the gypsies. She was asked to place the bill on a table in plain sight. The "seer" then began a long incantation of meaningless jargon, rolling her eyes and apparently going off into a trance. At the height of this frenzy the gypsy would substitute an imitation piece of currency for the real bill, which was pocketed. Then she would suddenly pick up the bill and tear it into many pieces or would quickly burn it over a candle, announcing, with great seriousness, that it was a sacrifice "for the spirits." The victim either liked it or didn't like it. In either case there was nothing to be done, for the money had apparently been destroyed. Just how important and profitable such trickery was becomes clear when, as Rosa declared, the gypsies on some days took in as much as $500 for "fortune telling" and its accompaniments!

Rosa's refusal to engage in "fortune telling" or to indulge in a little petty stealing did not raise her in Caesar Sidio's esteem. Although Rosa served all right as a wife and as a cook, the gypsy leader came to the conclusion that his $3000 investment was a rank failure. He consoled himself by beating Rosa frequently with a long stick which he cherished for that purpose. Her long black hair, which at one time reached almost to her knees, was pulled so often and so cruelly that more than half of it soon disappeared. Abuse, curses and beatings soon became her regular portion and she could find no consolation among the women who had always been jealous of her youth and attractions. Hers was a hard lot and there seemed to be no escape from it.

INDEED, aside from the abuse and cruelty she suffered, Rosa found the life of the gypsies a pleasant one. They traveled comfortably. There was little work to do. When they found a favorable camping place they put up their tents. The women set out to "tell fortunes." The men would idle about the camp or stroll about the town. When the day's "business" was over the women returned to camp and gave all the money they had obtained to the men. They ate but two meals a day, in the morning and at night. The meals consisted usually of some fried meat and an elaborate vegetable stew, which included potatoes, beans, cabbage, carrots and any other legume at hand.

After dinner there was merry-making. Wine was passed about. A circle was formed and the men played their mandolins or guitars while the women took turns at showing their skill at dancing. Sometimes there was singing. And then the fires would be banked and the wanderers would retire to sleep on huge feather pillows, which served as mattresses. Bathing usually consisted of a perfunctory washing in the water of some stream or pond passed on the route. Some of the men and women, says Rosa, were married. Others were not. It made little difference. Chastity and marital fidelity are things unknown to the gypsies, says Rosa.

AFTER visiting many American cities and villages the gypsy caravan arrived at the outskirts of Newark on the first of February. The tents were set up and fires were made. Caesar Sidio, the gypsy chief, drew Rosa aside.

"Well, have you changed your mind?" he demanded of her. And Rosa, hating him now more than ever because of the abuse she had suffered at his hands, exclaimed: "No, no, never! Not if I die, will I steal and lie to people! Never!"

Caesar struck her across the face, spat upon her and walked away. Late that day Rosa was told to get into one of the automobiles for a trip into the city. She was driven to the center of the city and on one of Newark's busiest streets was told to get out.

"We will be back in an hour," Caesar said to her. "Wait for us here." And with that drove away. One hour, then two and then three passed. Night came, but no one called for her. Then she set out to find the camp. She got lost, and for two days and nights wandered about the city without food or shelter. A police officer, early one morning, just after the peep of dawn, saw her walking about, and he rubbed his eyes in amazement. No wonder the officer was surprised, for the young woman he saw strolling about in the gray light of a winter morning was clad in a green skirt, a maroon waist, a red bandanna and an orange flower in her hair!

She was then given shelter at the First Precinct Police Station.

POLICE JUDGE BOETTNER and Frank LaFera, Overseer of the Poor, heard her story and were interested. Then Doctor and Mrs. John Casale offered the erstwhile gypsy girl a place in their home. She has been there almost two months and is delighted with the change. Letters come every day containing offers of adoption, but Rosa listens to none of them. Even the offer of a very wealthy Brooklyn engineer, the father of a family of distinction and position, who wants to take her into the family and send her to a private school, even this generous offer is not welcomed by Rosa.

"No, no!" she says excitedly, "I do not want to go. I like it here."

And then she adds smilingly: "I have wandered enough."

"They Marry For Love"

—the Daughters of the Millionaire Du Pont Family. One, Margaret, Is About to Wed a Chemical Engineer From Her Father's Powder Factory. Another, Alicia, Is About to Divorce Her Husband, Who Was Also a Chemist in the Du Pont Plant.

THE FORMER ALICIA DU PONT—Now asking for the divorce of her husband Harold Glendenning.

By ARTHUR H. STRAWN

Special to the Post-Dispatch Sunday Magazine

WILMINGTON, Delaware.—They are brave, these Du Pont heiresses, and with a will of their own. Independently wealthy and destined to inherit the vast fortune of their father, Alfred I. Du Pont, the powder king, these children of fortune look neither for money nor title nor social distinction in choosing their husbands. They marry for love, and the fact that the men of their choice are poor and are employed in their father's big factory at Wilmington makes little difference to them.

The recent announcement, however, that Miss Margaret Du Pont is to marry Crawford Greenewalt, who for the past two years has worked as a chemical engineer with the Du Pont company, comes as something of a surprise, for it follows closely on the heels of another announcement that her sister, the former Alicia Du Pont, who also made a love match four years ago with a young chemist of the Du Pont works, is in Reno about to divorce her husband. But her older sister's unfortunate romance does not deter Miss Margaret Du Pont. She is to marry Crawford Greenewalt in June, just as Alicia Du Pont married Harold Glendenning in June, 1923.

Alicia Du Pont's meeting and marriage with Harold Glendenning was one of those beautiful romances such as occur only in America. She was fabulously wealthy. He was the son of a Norwalk (Connecticut) mail carrier. For thirty years his father trudged through wet winters and hot summers about the little town of Norwalk, delivering mail. The farmers and townsfolk knew him familiarly and simply as "Glen." He supported his family comfortably and in time managed to buy the plain little frame house in which he lived.

THERE was only one cloud in the elder Glendenning's horizon. His son Harold was determined on a college education. He shared his son's ambition, but a college education cost money, and money was never plentiful in the Glendenning household.

"Don't you worry about that," Harold would say to his father when they discussed the question. "You just go on and look after the rest of the family. I'll take care of myself."

The boy went through the common schools and was later graduated from the Norwalk High School in 1914. He led his class in scholarship and was designated as honor man.

He worked and studied during vacations, he worked and studied over week-ends and at night, and he did all sorts of odd jobs, anything that a capable American lad can put his hand to in order to earn a few honest dollars. Chemistry had always been one of his delights, so when he had been graduated from the Norwalk High School his knowledge of the subject enabled him to take a job through the summer with a tire and rubber company in Norwalk. With the money he earned from this he paid his first year's tuition at Dartmouth College, and he managed to get through Dartmouth by working every summer with the tire company. He added to his income while at college by tutoring other students, for Glendenning was an excellent scholar, ranking high in all his classes and regarded with admiration by his fellows on the campus.

Then in 1918, as a reward for his fine scholarship, his industry and his ability, Glendenning was awarded one of the coveted Rhodes Scholarships at Oxford University in England. His father had died, but his mother had been left comfortably well off. He had no responsibilities there. By winning the prized scholarship his problems seemed to be settled for four years and his eventual success assured.

But before the letter-carrier's son could take advantage of his scholarship, war was declared between the United States and Germany. He was not yet of age, but he offered himself to the War Department. The War Department learned of his knowledge of chemistry and he was assigned to the chemical service at the Du Pont powder plant at Carney's Point, New Jersey.

Young Glendenning went down to the big powder plant. He looked even younger than his scant twenty years, but his intelligence and ability marked him out as one worthy of confidence. He was soon regarded as an exceedingly capable young man, whose quiet and serious exterior concealed a mind and personality of more than average depth. And thus, day after day and sometimes night after night, he sat in the laboratory among his crucibles and test tubes, in shirt-sleeves and overalls, working out his problems, lending his brains to the great contest being waged across the sea.

THE MARRIAGE of Harold Glendenning and Alicia Du Pont.

ONE day young Glendenning was seated on his stool in the laboratory, working out a chemical formula. He was completely absorbed in his problem. He did not hear the door open behind him and he did not see a very dainty little lady in short dresses enter with the superintendent. The little lady was none other than Alicia Du Pont, the 16-year-old daughter of Alfred I. Du Pont, heiress to many, many millions. Glendenning kept on with his work.

But the little lady halted the moment her eyes fell upon him. She gazed on him earnestly. Her guide began his customary explanation of the uses of the laboratory, but she cut him short with an impetuous gesture.

"Who's that boy over there?" she asked.

"Why — er — er — well, his name is Glendenning," answered the superintendent. "He's one of our chemists."

Little Alicia continued to watch the boy, and the boy, paying no attention to his visitors, continued with his work. Then said the imperious young lady: "Bring that boy over to me. I want to know him!"

The superintendent hesitated. "Don't you hear me?" exclaimed the little lady. "What are you waiting for? I want to meet that boy. Bring him over!"

Glendenning looked up as the superintendent touched his shoulder. He turned, and saw Alicia. She smiled and beckoned to him. And then, while the superintendent stood by and fidgeted nervously, wondering if he had done the right thing, Alicia Du Pont and Harold Glendenning chatted and laughed for a long time, just as though there was no gulf of powder and millions between them.

"I like you," said Miss Du Pont frankly as they parted. "I like you very much. Come down to my house next Saturday and stay the week-end."

And while young Glendenning was thinking of his worn wardrobe and what Mr. Du Pont would say about it, and just how he could get out of accepting the invitation gracefully, the pretty little princess smiled at him warmly.

"I'll be expecting you," she said. "Now don't forget." And with that she went, leaving young Glendenning in a maze of bewilderment.

Glendenning made inquiries during the next few days. He learned that the invitation was, in its way, a sort of royal command and that he couldn't very well fail to comply. He also learned that Mr. and Mrs. Du Pont never interfered with Alicia's choice of guests.

So that Saturday Glendenning, with his worn suitcase, presented himself at the big grilled gates of Nemours, the Du Ponts' country palace. Here the descendants of the powerful old French feudal lords had taken one hundred and fifty acres of forest and lawn. They had built a magnificent castle furnished in true regal style. And around it they had built high stone walls, thick as ancient fortifications. Here the fairy princess Alicia had been raised in baronial fashion, instructed by countless tutors, every whim catered to by a host of servants. And at the immense metal gates of Nemours, whose portals are grills of armor plate, Harold Glendenning presented himself. He was admitted and the princess herself met him as he entered the mansion. A liveried footman took his suitcase. Another took his hat, and he was shown to his suite of rooms, outwardly self-possessed but inwardly in a turmoil.

Everyone was lovely to him and even the many servants made him feel entirely at home and as if he were a visiting prince with a great fortune at his disposal. Mr. and Mrs. Du Pont were quite charmed by him. The visit was a great success. And after that, Glendenning frequently visited both the New York and Wilmington homes of the Du Ponts. And Alicia, the fairy princess, kept on liking him.

For four years the letter carrier's son labored in the powder factory, winning the confidence and respect of the great Alfred Du Pont himself. And all that time while Alicia was growing out of childhood into young womanhood, her interest in young Glendenning kept growing into deeper and deeper affection.

Finally, in October of 1920, Glendenning sailed for Europe on the Aquitania to take up his studies at Oxford. And on the same ship was Alicia Du Pont, bound for Europe for an indefinite stay. Her mother had died, leaving her four million dollars, and she was on her way to Paris to study music.

And then in June of 1922 they were married in London with the full consent of both families. Love had conquered all obstacles. Love in overalls had entered the steel grilled gates at Nemours and had stolen the heart of the fairy princess who lived there. The poor but honest son of the Connecticut mail-carrier had won the hand of the wealthy heiress of the proud old Du Pont family. A rare romance, to be sure.

But they did not live happily ever after. Glendenning finished his studies at Oxford. A son was born and the young couple returned to America. To all outward seeming, theirs was a peaceful and contented life, the fruit of a romance blessed by wealth and deep attachment.

And so no little surprise was occasioned last May when it was learned that the Glendennings had separated and that Mrs. Glendenning was suing for the custody of their son. The matter was settled out of court, Mrs. Glendenning gaining possession of the child. Whatever disagreements developed, the young couple had the good taste to keep them from becoming public property. Glendenning, now a member of the New York bar, went his way. His young wife went hers.

And now comes the announcement that the erstwhile fairy princess has established herself at Reno.

"We, well, we—we just separated," she says by way of explanation. "It's not very pleasant."

WILL life deal more kindly with her sister, Margaret Du Pont's, romance? Her fiance, although not the son of a humble mail carrier, has no social position to equal that of the powder princess he is about to marry. He is the son of Dr. and Mrs. D. L. Greenewalt of Philadelphia. He, too, is a university graduate, holding a degree from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Music first drew them together, for Miss Du Pont is an accomplished violinist and Greenewalt plays the cello, but even as was the case with Alicia Du Pont and Harold Glendenning, their long friendship ripened into love while he was employed in the Du Pont powder plant. But Alicia's unhappy marriage to a poor young man employed in her father's factory does not discourage Margaret from giving her hand to another poor young man solving chemical problems for the Du Ponts.

Love, they say, conquers all. The Du Ponts, for all their wealth and distinction, and even the example of an ill-starred love match, are evidently no exceptions. But, then, Alicia's example may mean nothing to Margaret. They also say that love is blind.

The Philosopher of the Corn Belt

Friend, Counselor and Guide Is Henry Field of Shenandoah, Iowa. And He Does a $2,000,000 Yearly Business. His Radio Station Received 200,000 Telegrams Recently. An Extraordinary Man, Henry Field.

By HARRY R. BURKE
Of the Post-Dispatch Staff

SHENANDOAH, Iowa.—Father Superior of the Corn Belt is Henry Field of Shenandoah, guide, philosopher, counselor and friend. Henry as a five-year-old boy started out one day to peddle 50 cents' worth of flower seed he had grown. That was 48 years ago and he's been selling seeds, mostly, ever since. Today he does a business of $2,000,000 a year by mail and has 500 people at work for him. His business extends all over America. Thousands upon thousands buy from him.

These same thousands believe in Henry Field. He has that way. He invites confidences and gives them. From the Canada line to the Gulf, between the Appalachians and the Rocky Mountains, Henry's name is a household word among the farmers. In What Cheer, Iowa, or Corsicana, Texas; in Chehalis, Washington, or Halcyon, Maine, you will find folks who know intimately all about Henry Field and his 11 children, and rate them all as friends. More—these persons can tell you just how much business the Henry Field Seed Company did today at Shenandoah, Iowa, and how that compares with the same day of last year. They can tell you how much growth there was in Henry's sales between this week and the same week of last year.

Henry tells them that by radio. His station, KFNF, keeps in touch with Henry's friends. On Washington's Birthday that station was two years old. From all over the corn belt came visitors. From all over the Middle West old-time fiddlers came to play. Henry himself presided as announcer. Thus:

"This is Station KFNF, Henry Field talking. That was No. 13 in the old fiddlers' contest you just heard. He's John Doe of What Cheer, Iowa. Send in your votes. Sam Smith and Mary Jones of Schuyler, Nebraska, want their folks at home to know they got here safely. Bill Jones wants his folks to know he won't play in the contest until tomorrow, so don't sit up all night waiting for him.

"Mike O'Grady of Atlantic, Iowa, wants to know if his daughter, Norah, and her beau have arrived. Yep, and as happy as two turtle doves. Chamber of Commerce at Hot Springs, Arkansas, sends congratulations and wants us to co-operate with their station, KWGO. All right, send us some of your hot water and we'll send you some of our morning glory seed.

"NEXT fiddler is No. 14, Josh Brown of Hancock, Iowa. Make your own announcement. Wait a minute. Philip Maytag of Newton, Iowa, has just arrived and wants his mother to know it. All right, Josh, now go ahead."

Into his radio talks, into his publications and his catalogues, Henry Field puts just that touch. The farmers like it. For his birthday celebration at station KFNF, Field received more than 215,000 telegrams of congratulation.

Of course, there was a string to it. Everybody who sent a telegram received some kind of prize, ranging from a Pontiac automobile to a rosebush or a package of flower seed. Probably it cost a lot—that piece of advertising. It may have cost more than its benefit will justify, although nearly 8000 of the telegrams brought orders for shrubs or seed. That wouldn't make much difference to Henry Field. Despite the immense business he has carried on for many years, he isn't a rich man. His friends say he's too honest, and in that there may be more than a germ of truth. But business observers remark that Henry would spend $105,000 to do $100,000 worth of business along a certain line and be perfectly satisfied if he did what he'd set out to do, despite the cost.

The personal touch, and the reputation for honesty—these are his stock in trade. Sometimes in the seed and nursery business something goes wrong. The goods sent don't satisfy. Likely enough the customer hasn't followed directions, but the customer won't realize nor acknowledge that fact. When an order goes wrong with Henry Field he asks two questions of the customer:

"What's wrong?"

"What do you want?"

And he does what the purchaser suggests to make it right. Even those in Shenandoah who don't like him tell you that.

And Henry tells you: "Of course it pays. I have customers in every postoffice in America. And 999 out of 1000 of them will meet you more than half way if you just show the slightest inclination to be square with them."

Henry Field's business wasn't built by people, but by "folks"—just like that. No business man since Elbert Hubbard has been so well, so intimately, known by "the customers." Theirs is a similar genius. Hubbard chose to deal with that portion of the American society which seeks the intellectual uplift. Henry Field's friends and customers buy roses instead of cribbed biography, bulbs instead of "White Hyacinths," morning glory seed instead of polished piano benches with the bark on the other side. They like "Silver Threads Among the Gold" better than Tosti's "Good-bye," "Turkey in the Straw" better than Raff's "Cavatina," and "Rock of Ages" played on the melodeon better than Saint-Saens' "Danse Macabre." Henry Field's friends are just folks—but they have the urge to beauty and the urge to beautify.

THEY know about Frank, Henry's son, who's 31 and at Council Bluffs in business about Faith, who's 24; and Hope, who's 23; about Philip, 21; Josephine, 19; Jesse, 17; Mary, 15; Ruth, 12; Georgia, 10; John Henry, 9, and Letty, who's but 7 years. These are all Henry's children. And Henry knows about the offspring of his friends.

"My children, Peggy and John," wrote a woman from down in Kansas late last April, "want to go barefoot, but I told them it's too early. They made me promise I would ask you."

And Field, the night he received the letter, answered by radio. "John Henry and Letty have been going barefoot up here for the last three days," he said, "I guess it's none too soon."

So they come to him with their troubles and perplexities. "I'm not very old," wrote a woman from St. Joseph, Missouri, last October. "I'm smart enough, and a good housekeeper. But I'm a widow and I don't like to live alone. Ain't there some nice man you know?"

"I'd known her for quite a spell," said Henry Field. "I knew from the flowers and seeds she bought what a neat kind of a woman she was. So I thought of a man over in Eastern Iowa. I got them together. They liked each other and were married. They came up here to see the seed house and they got me off in a corner, each of them separately, and thanked me and told me how happy they were."

HENRY FIELD didn't get on terms like this with all these folks by accident. And he didn't learn how to reach them through a correspondence course, or college, either. Twenty years ago he was peddling vegetables from door to door in Shenandoah. They were his vegetables. He'd grown them. He knew all about them. He had a way of telling the facts so that the housewife believed that no sweet corn on earth was quite as sweet as Henry's. It wasn't that Henry said his roasting ears were sweeter. But something about Henry's talk just made her feel they must be.

He had learned that way of talking in the school of hard experience, and in spite of the fact, he says, that he had a college education.

"It took me ten years," said Henry Field, leaning across the flat-topped desk in his cluttered office, with its cineraria plants and artificial flowers lining the window ledge—"it took me ten years to get rid of the handicap of a college education. That's why I won't have a college graduate working for me if I know it, nor a high school graduate if I can help it."

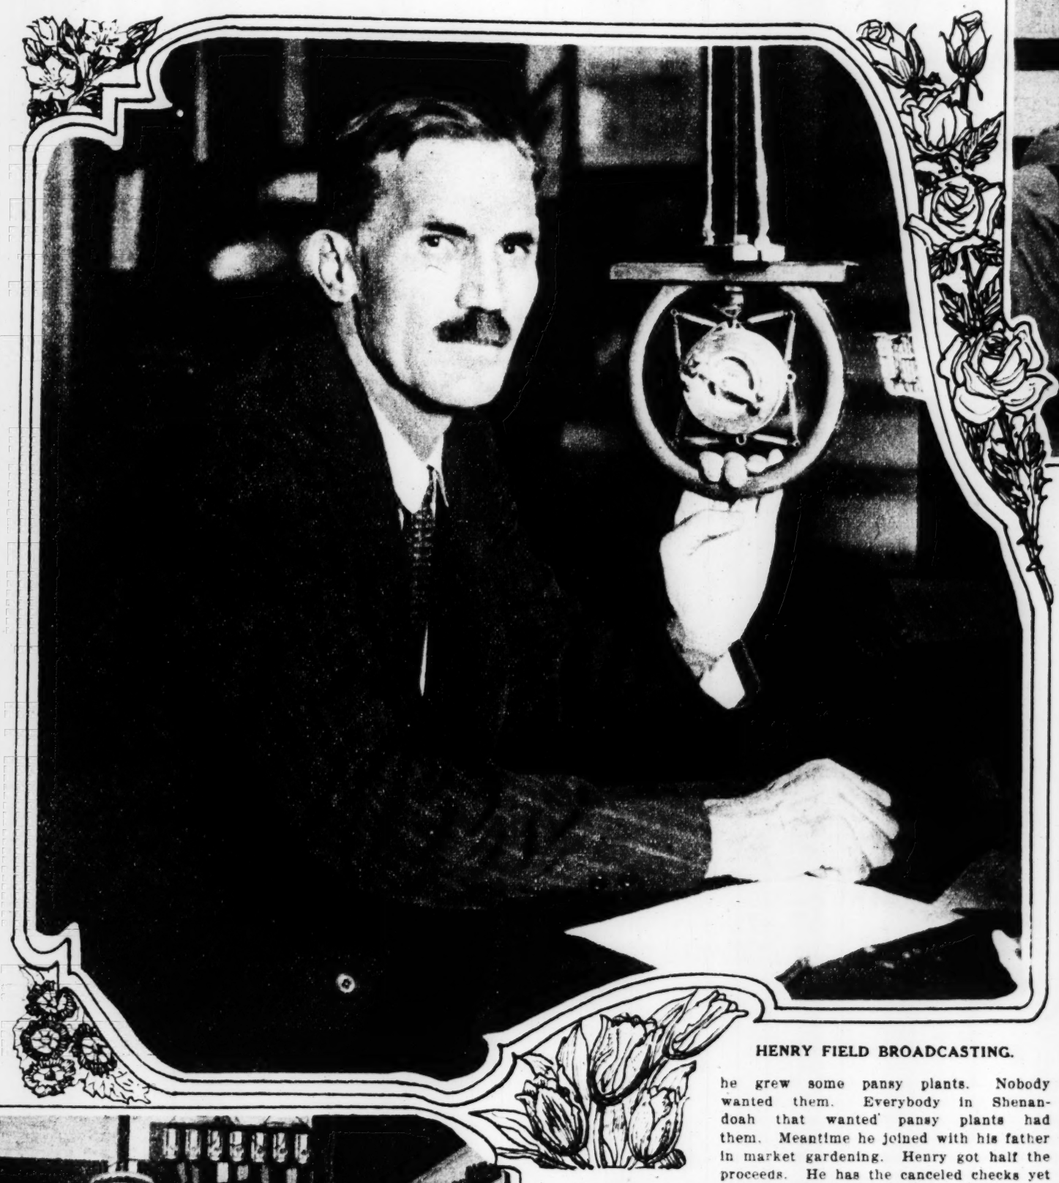
It required deep probing to win from Henry the secret of his alma mater's name. He is not a man to parade to the world his shame.

"Western Normal," he said at last. "Just a little fresh-water college, which was located here. But I didn't graduate. The school burned down before I got my diploma. I never went back for it.

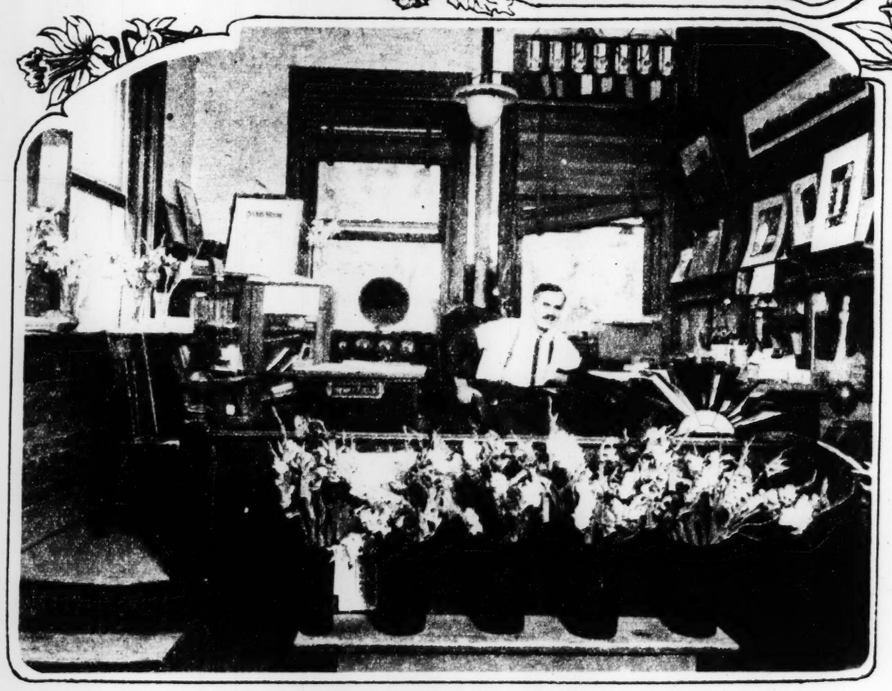
"They fill your head all full of useless things in college," he continued. "The whole system is wrong. A man calls his boy. 'I'm going to send you to college,' he says, 'because I don't want you to have to work as hard as your father did.'

"College fitted me for a 'white-collar job,' maybe. I taught school, but I couldn't make a living at that, so I started out to make an honest living.

"I had been interested in gardening, and seeds and such. So I started out to sell seeds and nursery stock. Pretty soon I found out that what I had learned in college was worse than useless.



HENRY FIELD BROADCASTING.



THE OFFICE. Henry Field at his desk.

"I had to get out among real folks. I couldn't go around any longer with my white collar holding my head 'way up in the air.

"Well, that winter and spring I got so I could stop a farmer in the road, maybe on his way to town or from it, and show him what I had, and tell him about it, while his horses were there, puffing clouds of steam into the frosty air, and kicking the frozen clods as they shifted from one foot to the other. And three minutes after I'd stopped him, maybe, I'd have his order and be on my way.

"I hadn't wasted any words. That was the secret. But in college all they had taught me was to waste words. That's why I won't have a college man around if I can help it."

And yet, Henry Field probably got his first real lesson in suggestion while at Western Normal College. George Bartlett of Red Oak, Iowa, tells the story.

"HENRY was peddling garden truck to put himself through college," he says. "Three of us made it up to have some fun. There was Professor Wilson and myself, and another fellow—I think it was Waite Phillips, who since has become a millionaire down in the Oklahoma oil fields. Well, we stationed ourselves along Henry's route one morning. 'Gosh, Henry,' I said when he came along, 'you look awful sick. What's the matter?' Wilson said the same thing, and the other fellow, too. We were several blocks apart and it seemed just casual. Well, Henry just went home after he'd made his trip and went to bed. He was sick, then."

Almost from the first, Henry Field wanted to be a seedsman. At first his ambition would have made him a railroad engineer or a policeman, of course, but at the age of five he put up and sold about 50 cents' worth of home-grown flower seed and his future was determined.

Along came a seed catalogue. He took the catalogue and started to sell. He trudged from door to door until his legs were tired and, footsore, he came to Aunt Martha Long, a neighbor, who bought an order that was small enough, but was the beginning. Later he grew some pansy plants. Nobody wanted them. Everybody in Shenandoah that wanted pansy plants had them. Meantime he joined with his father in market gardening. Henry got half the proceeds. He has the canceled checks yet which show that he received $2.65 for his half. He dreamed of being a gardener. His dream even today is of a business like that—a little business.

"When I started," he says, "I wanted a business that my wife and I could care for with the help of the children, and a hired man, maybe. I often long for just such a business now."

And you will believe, when he tells you this, for Henry Field, though it was early in the day when I saw him, was quite tired.

HE HAD been at the seedhouse earlier, to conduct the sunrise prayer service which is a feature of his radio station. Every morning at 7 KFNF has a few hymns, a Scripture reading and a prayer by the seedhouse folks. Henry's friends like it—await it. Some folk say they are suspicious of his religion. He never used to seem to be worried about it, they say. They forget that a year ago Henry lost his wife. The pipe organ in the radio station is a memorial to her and her religious spirit. So, one suspects, is the sunrise service.

Henry Field, after the prayer, had run across the street for breakfast. Now he came into his office, a tall man, slightly stooped, wearing a fur cap such as Iowa farmers wear, in his shirt sleeves but with a heavy fur overcoat thrown about his shoulders. He shook hands with a grip that would have done credit to a politician.

His face, long and narrow, is thatched with grizzled hair, there are high cheekbones and from cavernous sockets peer out limpid frank brown eyes. A long nose, a firm straight mouth, hollow cheeks and tired and sagging lines complete the face. His eyes peered out from small, old-fashioned gold-rimmed spectacles.

"The college man," he said, "is a pest. He lacks the ability to work. He lacks human interest—interest in folks. He got educated so he wouldn't have to work. That's what I have against them. We don't even have business college graduates at work for us here. You'd think a mail business ought to have a lot of specially trained stenographers. Well, we train our typewriters here. My secretary—that's what the city man would call her—used to work on a stitching machine in the printing shop. I saw how quick she was, and intelligent. Most of the girls upstairs never touched a typewriter until they came here."

His business "just grew." Henry Field set the type for his first mail order catalogue, just picked it out and put it together. He'd never learned the printer's trade.

It's the same way all through his plant. There is an elaborate card-index system—which he devised. But there are no steel cabinets nor patented cases for the cards. Just trays nailed together, like one would nail together trays for cabbage plants. The average business man would laugh to see the desks in one of the correspondence rooms. They are old-fashioned school desks—the kind the children of 30 years ago sat in—two in a seat. "They are roomy," Henry Field explains, and comfortable. Three girls were seated at such desks making out checks. "That's money to be returned," Field explained. "The people made a mistake and sent too much when they mailed their orders."

HE HAS certain rules for business success, but they are few. "Just be human," he says. "Be sincere, practical and pleasant. Just try to put yourself in the place of the fellow with whom you're dealing.

"Use common sense and few words. In this business the customer wants and often needs advice to get the best results. Make that advice practical. Know the truth from practical experience. Honesty may or may not be the best policy in business, but honesty is the most practical way of building a business up."

He believes his early partnership with his father was excellent training. He encourages his own children in business ventures. Lots of visitors come to the Henry Field seedhouse during the spring, summer and fall. Many of them want refreshments. Ruth Field & Co., the four youngest children, supply that want with candy and ice cream. They have a stand on the corner, with a neat sign painted on it.

"I have told you my own rules for business success," said Field. "I almost forgot the most essential thing. Man needs most of all in business a sense of humor. Why?

"Because things sometimes get so bad there doesn't seem to be any way out. You've either got to lose your temper, which is bad business, or laugh at your own plight. That's where the sense of humor is essential. Any man can laugh afterwards. We all laugh at what were troubles once. But the thing is to laugh instead of worry while the trouble's bothering you."

ONE travels through the seedhouse. It is one of six. Every little while Field buys a new building to add to his plant. They are scattered all over town. Down in the basement one finds a print shop that is astonishing. A perfecting press for his house organ, "Seed Sense"—a Miehle for the color work in his catalogues. In another place countless girls are tabulating the results of seed tests from 30,000 ears of corn.

It's a one-man business, and that one man is Henry Field. His personality pervades all. A dozen times in a brief interview he was halted to attend to some little thing that anyone else might have done if anybody but Henry Field "would do." Yet he will tell you that it's a one-idea business, and that the idea is not his but Kipling's:

"'For the Colonel's lady and Judy O'Grady
Are sisters down under their skins,'

he quotes. "The poorest tenant farmer's wife and the wife of the richest man in Omaha want the same things—beautiful things. They are interested in the same religion—Christianity. That's the reason for the success of my business. That's the reason for the success of the radio station. They both write me the same kind of letters—telling me how much they like my roses, or how much they like my programs. We don't play jazz here. We don't have professionals broadcasting over the radio. The seedhouse folks, myself, my sister, Mrs. Fischer, who gives garden talks. We sing old-time hymns, and we have old-time fiddlers and folks who play the accordion and the harmonica and the old-fashioned cottage organ. That's all there is to it. That's why they like us."

They do like him. Mound City, Missouri, with 1300 population, sent Henry 1500 telegrams of congratulation on his radio's second birthday. There were 216,746 messages received the first three days. One telegrapher loaded the messages and himself into a car and drove 90 miles to deliver them rather than spend the next day "pounding brass." There were 126 fiddlers who participated in the birthday contest. There were 22 birthday cakes sent in from farmers' wives to Henry and the seedhouse folks. There were over 10,000 farm folks who visited Shenandoah to see the seedhouse and Henry Field's new broadcasting plant.

They like Henry Field, these corn belt Americans who want to see roses blooming over their own front porches.

The Descent From Lost Mountain

Down Into the Valleys and the Plains Amongst the Rushing Cities They Must Go, These People Who Believed That They Would Live Forever. With Joab, the Messiah, Leading They Will Falter Out Into a Strange World—Doubtful, Hesitant, and Now a Little Uncertain About Eternal Life.

By GUY FORSHEY

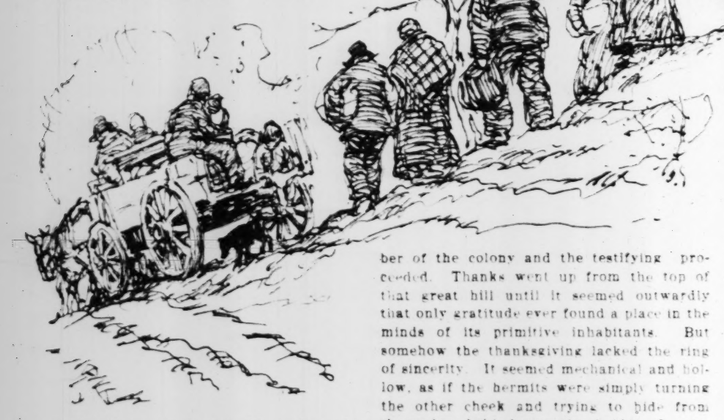
JOAB MORRIS, the Messiah of Lost Mountain—the leader of the flock—progenitor of the idea of eternal life on earth.

THE MESSIAH calls the faithful with his fox-horn trumpet.



ANTLERS, Oklahoma.—The shadows were growing short on the summit of Lost Mountain. The mists had lifted from Robertson Hollow half a mile below, revealing here and there the tiny forms of men and horses busy with the work of plowing. It was springtime in Southeastern Oklahoma. On all sides the farmers were exhibiting the signs of restlessness that farmers usually begin to exhibit when the first warm days of sunshine come to swell the buds and put a livelier sparkle in the brooks. Pushmataha County had arisen from its winter sleep and was at its labors—that is, all but Lost Mountain.

Lost Mountain was not at work. The smoke of late breakfast fires rose lazily from half a dozen of the squalid shanties that sprawl along the mountain's backbone. Ragged urchins were playing marbles in the street and frowsy heads peered cautiously from the windows of the meetin' house to investigate the sound of an approaching automobile. Not often do automobiles thread their way up the wooded slope of this formidable ridge to the confines of Joab Morris' "eternal city," but even if the chug of the laboring motor did arouse curiosity, it did not arouse activity. The "Church of the First Born" was at its worship and would not be disturbed. From the dilapidated meetin' house at the head of the village there came the monotone chant of a woman's voice and the staccato tap tap tap of feet. A member of Joab Morris' quaint flock of hermits was testifying.

"I thank God, I thank God, I thank God," the voice kept repeating, half-hysterically. "I thank God for all things." It sounded like a Southern Negro campmeeting. . . .

"I thank God I've been borned agin and reinerated. I thank God I have passed the grave behind and can look back over my shoulder and say, 'O grave, where is thy victim?' O death, where is thy sting?'" The speaker, a tall gaunt woman of about 50, paced the floor and swung her arms in wild gesticulation. A quaint picture she made, in faded gingham dress and spectacles perched upon her forehead. The spirit was talking and talking vehemently, and she was oblivious to her surroundings, to the approach of dinner time, to the arrival of a motor car and to the visitors who stole inside and took seats near the door. Somewhat less oblivious were her hearers, ranged around the room on benches. They stared inquisitively at the intruders, but offered no show of welcome or hostility and never once did those tapping feet miss a count. There were bearded old men and ageing women, strapping young men and comely bobbed-haired girls, children holding babies in their arms and other babies toddling about the floor. In his armchair throne, apart from the others, sat the venerable Joab Morris, the "Messiah" of Lost Mountain. From a great shock of beard and bristling hair he looked on with solemn approval, and the "testifying" went on. Truly full of thanks and gratitude seemed that female orator.

"I THANK God for eternal life," the chant continued. "I thank God we come here to live on this mountain and found His spirit. Great trouble has come on us, but I know God wouldn't let them drive us away from here if it wasn't His will, so I reckon we got to be satisfied. We air goin' away and I don't know what's goin' to become of us when we git off o' this mountain. We never come here to harm nobody and we hain't never harmed nobody. Folks down there in the valley don't like us cause we air goin' to live forever and they air all gonna die but we can't hold that agin 'em 'cause they hain't never been teached the true word like we have. But they air gonna git their punishment. The Lord meant for us to live here on this mountain and they air gonna be visited with His wrath for drivin' us away."

With a final burst of rhetoric and a call for hands on the question of whether anybody had aught against her, the speaker sat down and yielded the floor to another member of the colony and the testifying proceeded. Thanks went up from the top of that great hill until it seemed outwardly that only gratitude ever found a place in the minds of its primitive inhabitants. But somehow the thanksgiving lacked the ring of sincerity. It seemed mechanical and hollow, as if the hermits were simply turning the other cheek and trying to hide from themselves behind a routine babble of scriptural and ceremonial phrases. Only when there was mention of departure from the mountain did it seem that expressions were spontaneous and these were expressions of dejection and alarm.

Truly, the religious colony of Lost Mountain has reason for dejection and alarm. Troubles have been few since Joab Morris and his followers retired from civilization to the backwoods 12 years ago, but now real trouble is upon them, for paradise—the only paradise that has a place in their religion—is lost.

BY MARCH 25 they must abdicate Lost Mountain or reckon with the authorities of Pushmataha County. And they are preparing to abdicate, to scatter and to seek eternal life elsewhere, each for himself. Lost Mountain, the sacred ground which was to give them life everlasting upon the earth, has been found, alas, to have an earthly owner who objects to their presence. So, without belief in a hereafter, without hope of life beyond the grave, they are faced with the calamity of removal from the land that to them means protection from death and oblivion. Hardly is it surprising, then, that services these days are solemn and long-drawn-out and testifying a bit hysterical. Joab Morris and his followers are facing the great unknown and time is growing short. Already they can hear the spades beating down upon their graves.

Tragic though it is to them, the compulsory withdrawal from this great pine-covered mountain ridge is an outgrowth of circumstances of their own choosing. It was internal dissension that brought the law down upon the Church of the First Born. Until three months ago the residents of Antlers, 14 miles away, had scarcely even heard of the strange recluse band that dwelt in the clouds of Lost Mountain and spent anywhere from four to eight hours daily in religious devotion. They seldom visited the towns or mingled with outsiders, because their religion forbade it, and the townspeople never visited them because in the first place they weren't welcome and besides it was too hard to travel to the crest of that high ridge which stands aloof between two lesser ridges of the Kiamichi chain of mountains. About the only time that Joab Morris' flock received even passing comment was when, at intervals, a member would be arrested and locked up for petty thievery. Eking out a meager existence by hunting and trapping or working as day laborers occasionally at Kosoma, a lumbering hamlet two miles from the mountain's base, the colonists had few dealings with the outside world and few persons in the outside world except the Sheriff and neighboring farmers who missed goats and chickens and potatoes occasionally ever had any dealings with them. As for the land they had squatted on, nobody cared particularly about that. It wasn't good for anything but a hermit's retreat anyway. Somebody in Ohio bought the mountain many years ago without having paid it a visit first and then upon hearing what it was like, never had the courage to visit it afterwards. For all ordinary intents and purposes it was free land when Joab Morris and his tribe drove their covered wagons up the slope and set up their camp back in 1914.

BUT it wasn't illegal occupation of the mountain that aroused Pushmataha County to hostile action. That was only resorted to as a possible legal instrument. The fundamental complaint was that Joab Morris' uncouth and unwashed flock of hermits, with flexible principles concerning ownership of property, constituted an "undesirable element in the community and ought to be got rid of." Then as a straw to break the camel's back came the recent church fight, locally referred to as "the night that Charley Estes got beat up."

It was only a family disturbance among relatives and friends, but it had a devastating effect. In the first place, it sent Estes to the hospital to recover from the bruises administered by six of Joab's stalwart henchmen. That, in turn, caused Estes to complain to the county authorities and Lost Mountain thereupon became the scene of an official investigation which resulted in the arrest of the six floggers on charges of rioting. The charges themselves weren't so serious, but the publicity given the colony as a result of the encounter was serious. It caused a rehashing of all previous complaints and the voicing of an insistent demand that the colonists be ousted.

With the six disturbers under bond of $500 each, County Attorney Louis Gossett, detected a long-sought opportunity for gaining the desired end. He summoned the leaders to Antlers for a conference. If the band would clear out of Pushmataha County by March 25, and stay out, he would drop the charges. But if departure was not prompt he would press the prosecution and in addition bring up dispossession proceedings on behalf of the mountain's owner. The colony could take its choice.

Under the circumstances there was nothing for Joab to do but agree to get out, but it is a drastic step. Whatever may be his convictions as to eternal life in a physical body, it is not hard to see that the "Messiah" of Lost Mountain has but few more years upon the earth whether he lives on the sacred mountain or off of it. To express it in his own words he is "nigh onto eighty," and so feeble he can scarcely hobble about with the aid of a cane. For him to lead his band into new lands and start all over again would be unthinkable. It couldn't be done, so it appears that the banishment dooms the Church of the First Born to a speedy dissolution.

It was from Kingfisher County, Oklahoma, that the "prophet" led his band to the Kiamichi Mountains 12 years ago, as the result of what he says was a vision which appeared to him three times. "Go to the fastnesses of the Kiamichis," the spirit had counseled him. "There will be found a hallowed mountain which is the Lord's footstool. Live thereon, keeping contracts with God, and life eternal upon the earth will be yours." The vision was so plain, says Joab, that no doubt was left in his mind about which particular mountain of a long and rugged chain was the sacred peak. He knew it was Lost Mountain from the start, before he had even seen it, and came straight to its base prepared to enter upon an everlasting existence in the flesh. For awhile they had camped on the Kiamichi River, at the foot of the slope, and then they had moved to the summit and built a house of worship. Cabins had arisen in a long row along the mountain ridge and the colony had taken up its career as a unit on a sort of semi-communistic basis.

THE STRAGGLING village of Lost Mountain. An odd Main Street.

THERE were about eight families in that original group, including two married daughters and a married son of the "Messiah." Most of these have stayed and several other families have been added in recent years through marriages of the younger generation. Long-bearded Joab remained the supreme dictator because his communion with the spirit was a little closer, and the others occupied grades of greater or less importance according to their ability to receive visions and interpret the "unknown tongues" which are likely to speak from that mountain top without any warning at all. Jim Darling, bewhiskered son-in-law of the patriarch and known hereabouts as "the little Jesus" in deference to Joab, has risen high in the Church of the First Born as a result of his skill with unknown tongues. Why, he not only can interpret them right off, but can speak them himself. In fact, he admits himself that he and his wife "are about the best talkers that ever talked, I reckon."

"You ought to hear me preach for an hour," said Darling to the writer that day after the testifying was over. "I'd learn you things you never learned before."

That demonstration, however, was not encouraged, even though its instructional possibilities were admitted. The visitor had heard Mrs. Darling preaching upon his arrival, and having thus heard one of the "two best talkers that ever talked," was satisfied for one day. But he was hoping one of those unknown tongues would get going and ventured to express that hope. What were these strange tongues anyway? Some foreign language?

"NAW, they ain't French or English or Dutch," declared the little Jesus. "They ain't a language that's spoken on earth. They are the voice of the spirit. I can speak them because the spirit is in me. That's one of the things that makes our religion different from others. We believe that we ain't gonna die because our bodies are God's temples. He lives in them, so he ain't gonna destroy his own temples, is he? There ain't no such thing as a God that sits up in the skies in a golden chair, and they ain't no such things as angels with wings. That's all a damn lie. The other churches believe that when a man dies he goes to heaven and keeps on living. That's crazy. When they bury a man in the ground, how is he gonna keep on living? I don't care nothin' about that kind of a heaven. What if there was a heaven and all these Catholics and Protestants and Jews went there. They'd be fightin' just like they do now and they'd have a hell of a time of it. Naw, I don't want to die and take a chance on goin' to heaven. I want to live right here on earth and if I keep my contract with God I'll do that. It's natural to want to live, ain't it? A rabbit will run for its life. Why shouldn't a man want to live forever? Methuselah lived for 500 years, didn't he?"

The writer looked in vain for a sign of something in the existence of these people that might make eternal life in the body desirable. If there was anything besides the exhilarating air of that mountain top and the marvelous view of pine-covered hills to make life even tolerable, it was not apparent. There were no books except a few tattered Bibles, and few members of the colony could read anyway. The children weren't even sent to school until the recent court case came up. There were no shows within reach and Darling declared the flock of Joab Morris wouldn't go to shows if they were available. Joab had never been even to a picture show and neither had he. He couldn't even go to town nowadays without seeing a lot of women half dressed and he was ashamed to look at them.

Were there any amusements aside from hunting? No, none except religious services. Daily at 9:10 a. m. (nine o'clock and ten minutes, as Darling insisted upon having it) a hunting horn sounded and the colony assembled in the meeting house. Prophet Joab led them in prayer and then each member got up and preached or testified to his heart's content. Then at 7:15 in the evening the trumpet blew a second time and the services were gone through with all over again, their length depending on the amount of testifying to be done. Sometimes they lasted three or four hours at a stretch when the members had been talking with the spirit and had a lot to say.

Did they have no games, parties or dances? Oh yes; they did have dances. Every evening after the testifying was over the congregation would sing hymns and couples designated by the elders would march about the room keeping time to the music. Three couples were allowed on the floor at a time, but there was no hugging in these dances, the visitor was reminded. Joab wouldn't stand for that and he wouldn't let young couples run around together without being married, either. When the younger members wanted to "keep company" they had to get the church's approval and then go away to town, get a license and go through a legal ceremony. After all, though, their religion wasn't so strict. They could smoke and chew and drink if they wanted to and it was obvious that swearing wasn't prohibited. It did look as if bathing might have been taboo, but that question was allowed to pass. It may be that water has been scarce in the settlement. It is sometimes. When the cisterns go dry, as they nearly always do in summer, the colonists have to carry it up the mountain from the Kiamichi River. And that is only one of many hardships involved in Joab Morris' program of life eternal.

Considering all of the disadvantages of life in such a retreat, why did they want to live forever? Didn't they think they would ever get tired of it?

WELL, they might not have much fun when they got old, but life, such as it was, was better than being buried in the ground, wasn't it? Darling wanted to know. Their transcendent horror seemed to be the grave and the fall of clods upon a wooden box. It haunted them.

Then would removal from Lost Mountain mean their inevitable extinction?

That was a question that brought shudders and silence. Darling declined to answer, but the octogenarian, Joab Morris, hobbling about on his cane, was more philosophical. "Maybe it will. Maybe not," he put in. "All I can count on is that I'm going to live as long as the Lord is with me. He has been with us on this mountain so far. We never had any sickness to speak of up here and when we did have we cured it by prayer and laying on of hands. We don't bother with doctors. Only one man ever died up here and he died because he wouldn't do what Christ wanted him to do. He said that before he would obey God's commands he would die and go to hell. Well, he died and was buried in the ground. That was hell, wasn't it?"

This unfortunate one who preferred hell to life in the colony was Abe Barnhart, the visitor learned, and more was to be heard about his death from Charley Estes when Estes was sought out in the village of Kosoma, where he works at loading lumber. Estes, who married Barnhart's widow, thereby becoming Joab's son-in-law, hasn't lived on the mountain since he was beaten up and he doesn't hesitate to say what he thinks about his father-in-law and all the other prophets. He declares resentfully that they "laid for him" and tried to kill him because he wouldn't obey Joab Morris' church rules and wouldn't let his wife and her two grown daughters go to services every day. As for Barnhart's taking off, he hints strongly that it wasn't entirely due to the Lord's wrath.

"BARNHART had a lot of money that he brought here with him from Kingfisher County," Estes explained. "Old man Joab wanted it and told him that the Lord had demanded it, that Barnhart would die if he didn't give it to the church, or in other words, to Joab. 'Well, Barnhart said he would die first, and he did. He went to bed one night in good health and was taken suddenly sick in the night. The next morning he was dead."

Around Antlers it is said the prosecuting authorities are keeping this case in mind with a view to possible investigation if the other charges fail to oust the bearded fanatics; but present indications are that its resurrection will not be necessary. Joab Morris and his band are preparing for withdrawal. They have had enough of dealings with the law and are loading up their wagons. To Atoka County, west of Pushmataha, they will turn their steps in quest of jobs as farmhands, and it is likely that March 25 will find them on their way. Their cabins and the church house will stand deserted. Lost Mountain will be abandoned to the wild things of the forest. Paradise and their hope of everlasting life will be left behind.

Mrs. Dumbly

By Carol Brown

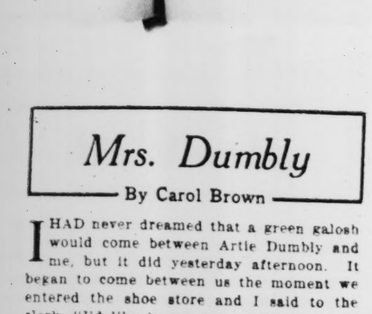
I HAD never dreamed that a green galosh would come between Artie Dumbly and me, but it did yesterday afternoon. It began to come between us the moment we entered the shoe store and I said to the clerk, "I'd like to see some galoshes."

"Humph," Artie grunted, "you don't have to come to a shoe store to do that. Stand any place on the street and you can see the galosh in all its manifestations—the galosh and a lot besides!"

I simply ignored him. Artie, like all men, becomes vulgar when he wants to be funny—he always talks about feet and such things. And, anyway, I was busy explaining to the clerk about my feet. He had started to measure my foot and I wanted him to understand that it was entirely unnecessary. I always wear a five triple A. Of course I told him that I have never had a shoe that really fitted me. My feet are so peculiar. They are, of course, very slim, and my instep is so high that I can hardly find a shoe with a strap that will button over it. It is very unusual.

"Every woman says that about her feet," Artie commented. "You hear it, so often in a shoe store, repeated over and over, 'my feet are peculiar,' as if it were an anthem. But if they really think that, why in the dickens do they make them more so by wearing galoshes!"

There is nothing I dislike so much as I do quarreling in public, but I explained to Artie, as patiently as I could, that women wear galoshes to keep them warm.



At that he actually snorted. "Then why did they wear those silly raincoats on clear, cold days all winter? Of course, the colors are hot enough, but you certainly don't claim that they held any heat. And why—tell me why—you went out with satin shoes on the street part of the time this past winter and now that it's almost spring you insist on getting these green galoshes?"

"I don't see why I should answer that question!" I said hotly. "My new spring coat has fur around the bottom of it."

"YES," he said rudely, "but what about your neck and shoulders? That fur around the bottom doesn't touch you any more than the burning hoop does the jumping tiger in a circus. It swings clear of your knees and under it you wear a thin little crepe—crepe-di—you know what I mean—one of these flimsy silk dresses, and your socks are rolled so that your knees are bare."

"You aren't supposed to look at people's knees," I answered, my voice rising with just indignation. "I can't tell you how I despise men who look at women's knees!"

"Then," he said jibingly, "why do you dress your knees fashionably—I mean, undress them—and wear fancy garters, if you don't expect people to look at them? Wouldn't it be better not to expose such a large area to the cold?"

"Artie," I said, my voice trembling with anger, "I refuse to answer that question! I will not quarrel in public! What do you mean by alluding to my knees as a large area! Or were you referring to my feet? If you were, let me tell you right now that size makes no difference at all to me. I only care about being properly fitted."

Here I was obliged to stop and ask the clerk if the galoshes he was trying on me were fives, for I suspected by their size that they weren't, and I wasn't in the least surprised when he said they were five and a half. Now I never wear a five and a half, and I told him so.

"OF COURSE," I said, "my foot is unusual. I've never found a shoe that fitted me, but I know that five is my size. I think you had better try a five on me. This galosh looks so awkward."

"I thought you didn't care anything about size," Artie interrupted.

"I don't," I said. "It's simply a matter of principle with me. And, of course, I don't want my foot to look clumsy."

"Then, why do you want to wear galoshes?" he demanded.

"Artie," I said, angrily, "how many times must I remind you that I refuse to quarrel in public?" And I turned my attention to the clerk, bravely trying to be as unconcerned as if I didn't have an unreasonable husband. He was trying to put the five on my foot, but it somehow didn't go on very easily. But that, of course, was because of my high arch.

"Perhaps," I suggested, "the galoshes would fit better if I got a pair of shoes especially to go with them. May I see something in brown satin, sort of a sandal effect but with very high heels. I can't wear anything but the highest heels on account of my arches. All of my family are like that. Now my husband here can wear the flattest kind of shoes."

Artie interrupted me this time to say:

For Rent

By Elwood D. Ullman Jr.

IT WAS late winter, and two homeless millionaires sat in the public park enjoying the evening blizzard. Adhering to a hospitable concrete bench, the two fresh-air hounds listlessly watched the snow pile over their knees, but they were not afraid of catching pneumonia, as they had gone through worse than that in an apartment house.

"Excuse my seeming aloofness," said the first millionaire abruptly, "I would have spoken to you before, but you have frozen so stiff I thought you were a statue of General Grant."

The second millionaire tried to peer into the other's face but couldn't, owing to the fact that the smoke abatement ordinance was still a legend.

"To what miserable depths have I sunk," he remarked, scooping a few handfuls of snow off of his chest. "Last night I had a home—"

"You had a home?" snapped the first millionaire with a wolfish snarl as he grabbed his companion in a frenzied clutch. "How come you had a home? Do you know that I've been trying to buy a home for weeks! The only thing that I could get, and the closest to the city, was a room over a tanning establishment in the outskirts of Boonville."

"I should say, I had an apartment," corrected the second millionaire, and the first loosed his grasp in disappointment.

Plucking an icicle off of his chin, the second millionaire resumed in distant, melancholy tones, "It was a one-room suite. One genuine room and three adjoining cubby-holes. There were supposed to be four cubby-holes but I could never find the fourth after that swindling agent left us. He pulled a lever somewhere and we had a pantry, but where that lever was, I never discovered. I quit looking for it the other day when I yanked a brake and a bed leaped out of the wall and jumped at me like a wildcat. Say, have you ever been torpedoed? I've got a bump on my knee as big as a billiard ball where I coincided with that leaping davenport."

"IT MUST have been rather difficult getting along without a pantry," ventured the first millionaire.

"Oh, no, we used to take the dishes and file them in the phonograph album," said the second millionaire gloomily. "By the way, have you ever seen an efficiency phonograph? We used ours for a combination library and icebox."

"You didn't play much music, I suppose."

"We didn't play any," said the second millionaire, "there wasn't any room for it."

"I would have enjoyed moving a phonograph into my apartment," mused the first millionaire, "but we were pretty well crowded with an ash tray."

"My wife wanted a goldfish and a canary for pets," said the first millionaire, "but we were so crowded we had to compromise and get a flying fish."

"You had to be an expert mechanic to regulate our apartment. For instance, we formed the dining-room by pushing the kitchen to the left and imagining."

"What was the name of your joint?" asked the first millionaire.

"The Houdini," replied the second. There was a pause as the memory of his bitter experiences surged over him, and he clutched a handkerchief to his streaming eyes. "We were so efficient," he wailed, "that we even ate combination salad."

"You don't look like a man who has always lived in apartments."

"I HAVEN'T," sobbed the second millionaire. "Three months ago I ran a cow academy down in Arizona, where we used to complain about congestion if a neighbor settled within a radius of thirty miles."

"Does the city depress you?" asked the first millionaire sympathetically.

"It c-compresses me," wailed the second. "Think of all those lucky guys in solitary confinement in the city jail." He flecked the frozen tears off of his expression.

"I stood everything up to yesterday, when I forgot that the davenport was the kitchen stove when it wasn't being used as a davenport. You see, I was taking a nap and accidentally moved the fatal lever which converted the davenport into a gas range and me into a substitute pot-roast. Two hours later I was being baked en casserole. The only thing that saved my life was a shower of pepper which the cook threw in to season me. I got out of the stove with all the dignity I could command and asked the cook if she was trying to cremate me or merely sacrifice me to a heathen god."

"An apartment cook," said the first millionaire, "should never use a stove without

Lardner Declares That He Lives On Trains

"OUR MOTTO NOW IS: 'BRAINS BEFORE BRAVERY'"

By RING LARDNER

IT LOOKS like I and the little woman had gone train crazy like the dame in Frank Craven's "First Year," and we don't no sooner get off of one rattler when we climb aboard of another, nor does it seem to make much difference where they are head for or why. As these lines is written, which is a long wile before they will be read if at all, we are stopping off at home 3 days to get a good meal and a clean shirt as traveling raises havoc with shirts and besides which I have been in the throws of a shirt famine ever since my favorite garment of that ilk decided to settle down in Pittsburg.

HOME NEWS.

Great Neck seems to of continued to thrive during our absence and so far they ain't been no meeting of protest vs. our going away again so the only ones that is libel to find fault is those of my admires who likes to hear news and gossip of the heavily mortgaged love nest that I call home and the queer people I call neighbors. To pacify same I will set down the few items I been able to glean between trains you might say and will begin with a wd. or 2 in regards to my orphaned kiddies.

SLOGANS.

Well, it seems that 3 of the 4 has been amusing themselfs by choosing mottoes or slogans and the motto selected by John, aged 13, is "Quanti est sapere" which he says means "It is great to be wise," but his brother Jim, aged 11, says the real translation is "It is great to be a sap." Jim himself has 2 mottoes, "Brains before bravery" and "To he—ll with music lessons." The choice of Bill, aged 10, is "Die Rache ist suess," meaning revenge is sweet. Maybe it is just as well that his general silhouette is such that his nurse has ordered him to lay off of sweets.

FAVORITES.

Another pastime in which John and Bill appears to of been engaged is selecting their favorite so and sos, like for example each of them has picked out their 3 favorite men who they consider the 3 greatest men of all time. John's 3 is H. L. Mencken, Geo. Washington and himself and Bill's is himself, Lincoln and Kipling. Jim tipped us off that John also had a list of the 5 greatest women and when asked to name them the big Nordic said they were Mrs. Percy Hammond, Marjorie Rambeau, Suzanne Lenglen and Amy Bemak. He refused to name the 5th, saying he had forgotten whom she was. It may as well be exclaimed that Amy Bemak is 4 yrs. old. The ages of the other 3 is not necessary to the plot. The selection of Mrs. Hammond will be no mystery to those acquainted with that lady but for the benefit of those that ain't will state that she has often been referred to around our mortgage as the perfect wife, not only by the undersigned but by as many as a dozen of those who I laughingly call my boy friends and John may of listened in on the conversation of his elders.

CHIPS OFF THE ——?

Jim said he would announce his favorite men at some later date and, when urged to choose his favorite woman replied that he hated them all.

ALWAYS A BUST.

That is about all I could learn in regards to the little ones except that they had played considerable hocky with David, age 6, on John's side vs. Bill and Jim and reported that they only had 3 sticks so that David had to play without a stick but they didn't seem to think that affected his game. This little upstart may be a chip of the old block, the last named having played bridge without cards ever since the d—m game was invented.

NO MISDEAL.

Speaking about which the winter in Great Neck has been marked by more or lest of a quietus in bridge circles most of the experts having sojourned 2 or 3 months in the Ritzier portions of Florida at my expense and that of the madam who holds even fewer cards than her old man. Unlucky at cards, lucky in love was never more truly spoken than in her case.

THE RACES.

Well pretty near everybody who I dast write about has been rambling just like us and friends of the Gene Bucks, who was in Palm Beach most of the winter, reports that Gene made a big mistake not leasing his living rm. for the six-day bicycle race as the new Madison Square garden could not begin to accommodate the devotees of this soul stirring pastime. Gene wired that he wanted to keep the rm. neat for the Olympic games of 1932. Gene Jr. is entered in the Marathon that yr. and is all ready a top heavy favorite having circled the rm. twice in practice in 2 days, 4 hrs., 20 min., 3 2-5 sec. with 2 stops for engine trouble and milk.

THE CHAIN GANG.

Of course they was a big mail waiting me on my arrival home and a feature of the stack was 6 or 7 of these here unendless chain letters which it is suppose to be bad luck to break the chain. Well it must be that some of my readers has remembered how I stand on this subject and they being too superstitious to break the chain themselfs, they have forwarded them on to me and I beg to assure one and all that your confidence ain't been misplaced and each and every one of the cunning little devices has found repose in the depths of my ash bbl. It would be a big saving for the gen. public if the boys who start these things going would address them to the undersigned first as I know just what to do with them and enjoy the moral support of mail carriers and postal clerks all over the U. S.

ETERNITY.

Well I guess that about exhausts the subject of Great Neck for this time and as I say you can't gather up many items when you ain't only home 3 days in 3 months but I all most forgot to mention that my friend Jim Browning reports that they's 2 girls that rides in on the 8:20 that still does cross wd. puzzles and also the night after I got here the lights didn't quite go out but got so dim that I could not see who was setting acrost from me at the dinning rm. table but suppose it was the same party that has been there these 14 yrs. and you would think she would of had enough to eat by this time.

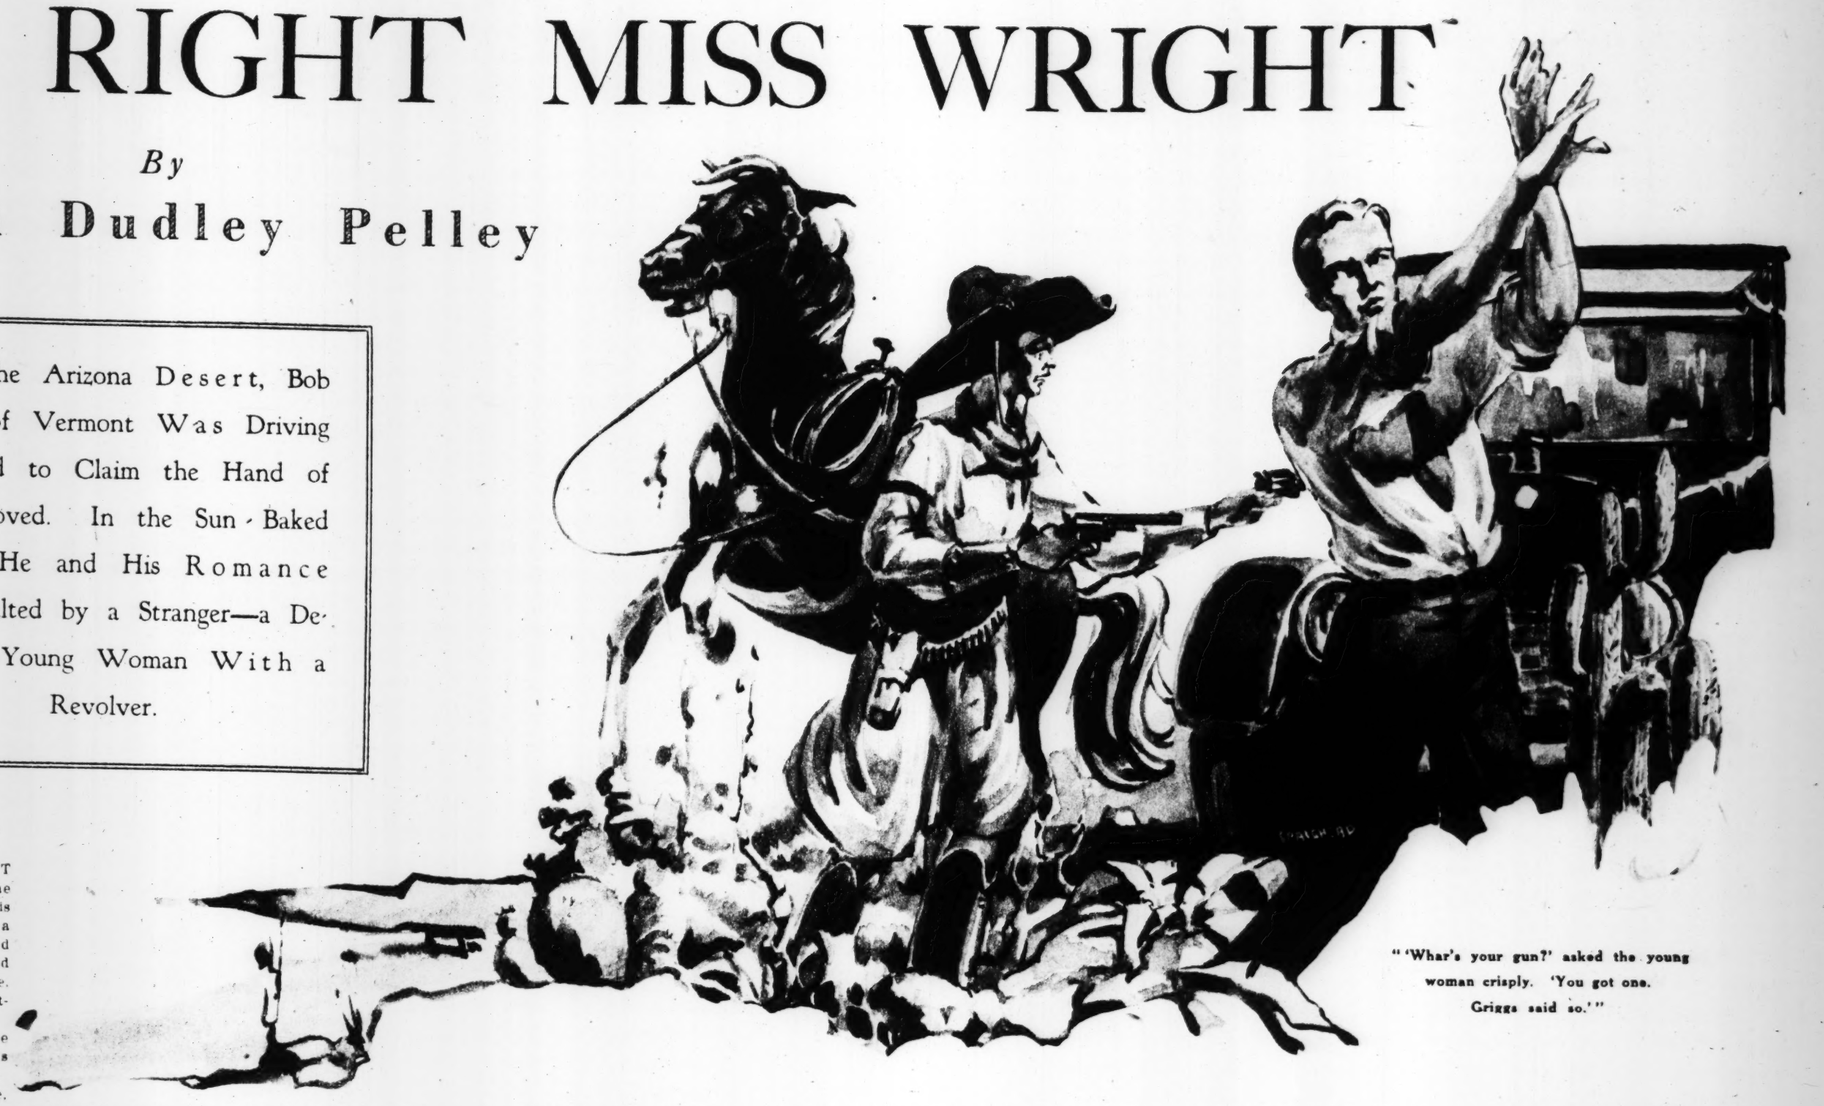
THE RIGHT MISS WRIGHT

By

William Dudley Pelley

Across the Arizona Desert, Bob Hobart of Vermont Was Driving Westward to Claim the Hand of His Beloved. In the Sun-Baked Solitude He and His Romance Were Halted by a Stranger—a Determined Young Woman With a Revolver.



"'Whar's your gun?' asked the young woman crisply. 'You got one. Griggs said so.'"

BOB HOBART "killed" his engine and allowed his coupe to roll to a halt. His head throbbed. Arms and shoulders felt afire. He wetted dust-caked lips.

"So this," he sighed wearily, "is the desert?"

He rode alone in the heavy machine, camping accoutrements barnacled on running boards and bumpers. Relaxing his grip on the big scalloped wheel-rim, he pushed up the rakish handkerchief that bound his forehead and surveyed the expanse of sun-baked immensity stretching off into haze.

He had reached the edge of a cedar mesa. Below him Western Arizona had become a universe with its ceiling melted off. The sun's rays poured into a world of tortuous aridity, of sand and lava-ash, yucca and cacti, seemingly without a sleve of intervening ether to mitigate the searing refraction. As far as his eye could discern, the Santa Fe trail narrowed to a pair of drunken wheel tracks, hub-deep in sand, curving down the nearby grade and off into gridiron distance. For 20 miles he could see it ahead—as though some capricious deity had scratched the burned browned surface of things with a sharp knife-point and the earth bled yellow gravel.

It was desert with a vengeance. The tourist searched a vista built on two planes only: vertical and horizontal. Nowhere else in the world did the sky lift so high or the panorama open so wide. The serried summits of lava mountains far to the south and north resembled the backs of titan elephants herded motionless in distance through the eons.

Not even one lone buzzard flapped up in that measureless vault; not a sign of human life lay disclosed on all that expanse spread below. Once, an hour bygone, coming over a mesa mountain with scrub cedars dotting it like olive polka-dots on dun-colored fabric, Bob thought he discerned another car not unlike his own crawling miles and miles on ahead like an ant. But he had lost sight of it long since. Now he had the earth to himself.

"And I must cover all that," he groaned, "before I can get more grub or water!" He looked at his wrist watch. Thirteen minutes to 5. Two hours more and then sunset. He would try for the public camping ground at Kingman before calling it a day.

He thought of his own Green Mountains of Vermont as he screwed the cap back on his smaller canteen and rolled a fortifying cigarette. He recalled cool rills, mossy ravines, inviting openings into green pastures and along still waters where a supper trout might rise to a fly. That was God's country.

HE FELL to wondering how Mary would react to such blistering distances hour after hour, day after day. She had never been keen about touring; his message that he intended to drive his machine across America and persuade her to end her California visit as "something other than a friend" had met with lukewarm response.

"Wonder if I'm making the mistake of my life?" the man had asked himself a hundred times on that lonely trek. "I like this sort of thing. She thinks it's barbaric. If I'm worried about her endurance on a 20-day journey in a car as comfortable as this coupe, what am I letting myself in for for life? Oh, well," he laughed, "they're all alike only their names are different!"

Despite the 180 miles he had driven since morning, he knew he could not tarry longer. His starter whined; his motor sprang alive, and the car moved forward down the grade. There just below him on those scorching reaches his great adventure lay in wait.

Cicadas kept up an incessant sizzing as though the desert floor were strewn with millions of invisible rattlesnakes, their sinister tails all snapping in chorus. The coupe, caught in those resilient sand tracks, remained in them like flanges. Bob's only control of his machine he maintained with one cramped instep against the accelerator.

After traveling through four or five miles of yucca, greasewood and Needles of the Lord he came suddenly upon an impassable barricade. The trunk of a dead yucca tree had been dragged out across the trail. Against this "log" a board had been leaned. On it were red-chalked letters: "TURN HERE!" and an arrow pointing southward.

Bob Hobart swore. Such a circuitous route meant additional miles of driving before he could reach the day's destination. Nevertheless, glancing back to make certain no tourist car followed into which he must crash, the Vermonter reversed his gears and churned in retrograde to a place allowing him to mount out of the flanges. Then between patches of brittle, grewsome vegetation, he began twisting his way, steering around yucca trees, boulders, buttes and dunes, down along the dried-out bottom of a prehistoric river.

Down, down, down—lower and lower—into country momentarily growing wilder and rockier—his car nosed its way. Buttes and ranker vegetation shut off the northern view completely and a mammoth basin floor opened ahead.

"I'm lost!" Bob cried. "This isn't any trail. I've been sidetracked—off down here in this crazy chaos."

Not a sign of a tire-track revealed that any other car had passed that way before him. He worked his way up the waterless river bed until queer square ledges showed ahead. He mounted a slight incline.

Then ahead in the corridor of open sand appeared the prostrate body of a man!

BOB halted—sat staring. Legs and feet thrust out from the cacti, grewsome boots upturned, torso and head out of sight in the nettles. No way of circling him was apparent. Bob must stop and remove him or crush him.

In one of his suitcases the tourist had an automatic. The first week in this desert country he had worn it beneath his shirt. Then he had carried it stuffed in the crack of his cushions, finally packing it away altogether. But the sight of those mute legs so startled him that no thought of the weapon entered his head. Some desert "rat" had toppled or fallen down the butte, landing dead or unconscious at its base.

Bob fumbled with the handle and got the door open. Out on the running board he stepped, and down on the sand. Leaving his throttled engine turning over softly, he approached that grisly figure. He got abreast of it and stared blankly.

No man lay there—only a pair of old trousers stuffed with straw. Boots had been added to supply grim realism. Queer practical joke, this! Did anybody think——

Then an acrid voice sliced the silence:

"Reach for a star, stranger! Any star'll do! But reach for it quick. And don't make the least fumble!"

In reflex action Big Bob raised his eyes. Twenty feet from him, atop the low butte, stood a woman. She had one arm through the bridle-rein of a nervous calico pinto. Yet Bob saw more than girl and horse. He looked up into the ugly black holes of two revolvers, their muzzles resembling twin tunnels opening into disaster.

"Did you hear what I said? Get your hands toward heaven, and get doin' it quick!"

"My—dear—young—lady"——

"You needn't dear-young-lady me! You hoist those hands!"

No such command had ever before been addressed to Robert Hobart of Paris, Vermont. His obedience was therefore slow and clumsy. A lady road agent!

"Now, then, turn 'round!"

Still feeling foolish, and not a little nettled, Bob did that also. Then a woman and horse slid down the butte. Cold steel punched in the small of his back. A businesslike hand patted around his belt, the pockets of his hips, the bulge of his khaki shirt beneath the arms.

"Whar's your gun? You got one. Griggs said so."

"IN THE car I've got a gun. But what's the large idea? Movie camera hid around somewhere?"

"You'll wish it was that. Whar you got Griggs' boodle?"

"Griggs' what?"

"You needn't try to act innocent-like. Reckon I've met your kind befo'. Wharever you got it, you can shove it out, quick."

"May I turn around now?" Bob's uplifted arms made agony in his tired shoulders.

"Yaas, you can turn 'round. But don't try no fumididdles."

Hobart faced about. A girl in her middle twenties—about Bob's age—in short brown riding skirt and with a sun-burned throat. Comely she looked, yet her shapely body had the resiliency of rawhide and steel. The man asked whimsically:

"How did you ever get away off here—so far from the 'Follies'?"

"So far from what?"

"The 'Follies.' You never heard of the 'Follies'? It's a Broadway show"——

"Never you mind any Broadway shows! Keep your hands lifted, stranger. I could drill you dead right this minute and get the reward just the same. So you remember it and be careful!"

"Reward for what, for pity's sake?"

"For you—if you don't know it yet."

"There's a reward out for me? For doing what?"

"Keep up those hands! I'm not an infant."

"No, I wouldn't call you an infant. But you're not exactly a lady, either—making me hold my arms up so with my shoulders afire from driving so far. Is this the way you treat visitors down here in Arizona?"

"When they've acted the way you have, yes."

She was an amazing girl. There was no doubt about it. Half a head shorter than Bob she stood—and the Vermonter was six foot one—built like a Juno and tempered like a valkyr. Her eyes were brown-topaz, her features ample, her color high with repressed excitement.

Her pinto, however, promised trouble. Plainly, it didn't approve of Bob's auto. It snorted, pranced and showed the whites of its eyes.

"My dear young lady," cried the flabbergasted Bob, "I haven't the slightest idea what you're talking about."

"You get back to your car—and just to make sure you don't start off, lift up your hood."

Bob made a grimace. "Why lift my hood?"

"I'll show you. And don't you reach for your gun! If you do, I'll settle you, stranger. I give you my word!"

Back toward the coupe the puzzled fellow moved, and the girl followed after—pulling the horse.

"Now, up with that hood or I'll drill you!"

With an uneasy laugh the Vermonter unclasped the spring hooks and raised the great tin cover.

"Now you stand back! Get away 10 or 12 feet. I could shoot these things out, but I'm taking no chances on emptyin' my guns!" And springing toward the car, keeping him covered with one revolver, she struck savagely at his spark plugs with the barrel of the other.

One, two, three, four, five, six blows she dealt beneath that hood. The engine went dead with an expiring backfire; the spark-plug wires swung loosely. As quickly she sprang away—or perhaps the horse pulled her.

"WELL," pronounced Bob, glassy-eyed, "you sure have raised hob with my bus. How far do you think I can go without spark plugs?"

"Go? You're stickin' right whar you are!"

"I'll say I am. Now what's it all about?"

"You start turnin' out what you got in your car. I want Griggs' money!"

"What put it into your head I've got Griggs' money—whoever he may be?"

"Reckon the make o' your car is enough for me."

"Aren't you mistaking me for someone else? And haven't you overlooked my Vermont license plates?"

"I'm not aimin' to palaver much longer with you, stranger. You never was courtin' calamity closer than you happen to be right this minute!"

"I can't make head or tail of what it's all about, but you're going to owe me a whale of an apology in about five minutes." And the nettled, exhausted fellow turned toward his carefully packed machine. The vehement Amazon pulled the plunging pinto closer. Up toward the running board Bob lifted one foot. Suddenly he stumbled, lost his balance, lurched inward against the wheel. Down on the horn-knob came his heavy forearm.

Gr-r-r-r! The horn screeched shrilly, loudly, defiantly. It was a powerful blood-curdling siren.

On steely hind legs the pinto reared in panic, then wheeled and staggered, whoofing wildly in terror. The bridle broke. Leaping clear of the ground, the horse went one way, its rider another.

Ten seconds later Bob Hobart held both guns and the girl a broken bridle. The bronc was racing down that river bed, head and tail lifted, stirrups slashing against thorn-brush and greasewood. In 12-foot jumps it vanished in the far-away distance.

Bob straightened, grinning. "Well, turn about's fair play," he bantered. "You put my bus on the blink. Now I've shooed off yours. Don't you think it's time to talk this little mess over?"

"G-g-give me my g-g-guns!"

"Let's see you get them."

The girl glanced down at her empty holsters.

"Waal, I reckon you've trumped my ace, stranger. That loco bronc has plumb busted everything!"

BOB "broke" the weapons, shaking out the cartridges and thrusting them in his trousers pocket. Producing his keys, he unlocked the lid of his running-board toolbox. In it he dropped both guns and snapped the lid back. "You really might hurt somebody with these, Miss Whatever-Your-Name-Is"——

"My name's Wright," she announced, a bit defiantly.

"It's what?"

"Wright. Mary Wright, if it does you any good to know."

"Hgh?"

"What's the matter with you? Can't you hear?"

Bob's jaw had dropped open. His eyes were wide. He pulled the rakish handkerchief from his forehead without taking his eyes from her face. "Heavens!" he gasped weakly.

"What ails you? What of it?"

"I'm bound for Pasadena—right now—to ask a girl named Mary Wright—to"——

"Waal, what's so strange about that? Reckon thar's more'n one Mary Wright in this country. I got mail for another when I went one time to St. Louis; but look here, stranger, what you aimin' to do with me?"

"I'm not aiming to do anything with you—that I know of, yet."

"I don't quite get your game, stranger. You seem to talk and act like a gentleman."

"Why on earth shouldn't I?"

"But how could a man who talks and acts like a gentleman do such a rotten thing as to rob old Griggs?"

"I haven't robbed old Griggs—or anybody. Unless I did it in my sleep."

THE sun had begun its descent down the west. Bob moved around with his back toward it, to get its glare from his eyes. The girl drew closer to the coupe, sinking down on its running board weakly. "Whar was you at 9 o'clock this mawnin'?"

Bob reflected. "I'd say I was 10 or 12 miles from Williams—heading this way."

"Can you prove it?" the girl demanded.

"I can prove I stopped on the camping grounds in Williams last night. I bought a new tire in a Williams garage just before sundown. That's it on my left hind wheel. Perhaps the bill, dated yesterday and receipted, would convince you I'm no desperado."

"Let's see it."

Bob found the paper in his wallet. He was carefully preserving all such to later compute the cost of his outing. Smoothing it out, he handed it across. Her face took on color. "And whar was you night befo' last?"

"Holbrook," he answered. "And the night before that I put up at the Harvey Hotel in Albuquerque. I've got that bill also."

"How'd you happen to be the one lone man drivin' through the same stretch o' country in the same kind o' car as that Eastern feller who looted old Griggs?"

"I didn't know I was. It's a stock car, this coupe. There's a thousand like it. Are you after a bandit—alone?"

"I was."

"Where did this looting occur?"

"Down to Kelson, on the new State road to Prescott, about 7 o'clock last night. But it wasn't discovered till after the feller left this mawnin'."

"How far's this Kelson?"

"Ninety-eight mile—by the road. But the way I took across Pisgah Canon shortened it to 31."

"As a matter of mileage, could I have been down around Kelson and Williams, too?"

"No, reckon you couldn't, stranger."

"Were you responsible for making me detour, back there on the trail?"

She nodded.

"I KIND o' figgered you'd come this way. And when Mr. Griggs offered a thousand dollars fo' recovering his money, and the Kelson Sheriff says get the bandit dead or alive, I reckoned I'd work my hunch. I brought some red chalk fo' the sign, and, stoppin' at the deserted shack in the canon fo' a board, I found the dummy—the posse used it last April to trick the Dyker boys the same way. Then when I saw you turn from the trail I threw the sign away and followed you myself."

"Will your horse come back?"

"Reckon he won't—not without a bridle. He'll lope home to Kelson." She looked around in flaming mortification. "And now I've smashed your engine so you can't get out o' here yourself—and it's six miles back to the trail, with night comin' on. Oh, oh, oh!"

Bob sank on the sand. "Seems funny to be sitting here talking to a lady with the same name as the one I thought of asking to marry me. You live in Kelson, wherever it is?"

"I run a ranch a little way outside, with three or fo' cow hands. I took over the place when my uncle died. I live thar with Hester. She's my cousin—and crippled. Are you really an Easterner? You really from Vermont?"

"A little one-horse town called Paris, away up in the heart of the mountains. Hobart's my name—Bob Hobart. I own a pulley factory and machine shop up there. But I had to break away this summer and see a bit of America before I settled down—or go crazy. Same old program from Monday morning till Saturday night. I thought I'd see something of the world when the war broke out. But I caught the flu down to Camp Devens. By the time I'd recovered the show was over."

"It's the first time you've ever been down here?"

"It's the only time I've been west of Chicago in my life."

Her gaze dwelt on him closer—his splendid physique, his wavy brown hair, the strength of his features, the kindly humor in his eyes, the wistfulness about his mouth.

In Court

By Thos. W. Parry Jr.

GRAY melancholy clouds that hang heavily just above the windows of the St. Louis Court of Criminal Correction seem to cast additional gloom about the dismal room. Even the lights above, dimmed by a month's collection of dust, spread pale beams about the place. Adding to the despondency of the spectacle.

A thin-faced man, bedraggled and unshaven, slouches in the defendant's chair. On the witness stand his wife tells His Honor that her husband has failed to support her. Her features add weight to the accusations. Her hands are red and rough. The knuckles stand out like over-sized warts. Somewhere in the dismal room a baby wails pitifully, as if bemoaning the plight of the haggard-looking couple. The husband takes the stand.

"Have you anything to say?" His Honor asks. The defendant doesn't answer. He appears drugged. "Do you realize you are on the verge of going to the workhouse?" asks the Judge. A mumbled grunt is the only reply. "One year in the workhouse; ought to give you ten," bellows the jurist. The accusing wife shrugs her hunched shoulders indifferently. She smiles flagrantly as she leaves the court.

"CALL the next case, Mr. Sheriff," orders His Honor. A short, stocky, square-faced bailiff shifts hurriedly through a stack of papers. Then, in a deep croaking voice that reminds one of mill ponds: "Andy Edwards come forward, Charles Cowan—etc." No one stirs.

"Call the defendant on his bond," the Judge orders, never shifting his gaze from a fixed point in the rear of the room. More croaking. "Andy Edwards, Andy Edwards, Andy Edwards, come into court and save your recognizance. Ike Lowenstein, Ike Lowenstein, Ike Lowenstein, bring the body of Andy Edwards into court and save your recognizance." No one stirs, save members of the audience, who shift lazily.

This audience presents a drab imbroglio. Scattered here and there in the crowded courtroom, like daubs of brilliant yellow on a cloud of dull gray, are a few bright-looking countenances.

On the extreme right in the front row slouches a man of medium height, fat and flabby of face. His eyes are half closed. They are obviously in their natural state. The flesh hangs down like rolls of greasy blubber from his cheeks. A lone button holds his dun-colored topcoat fastened across the pre-Volstead belly. A green sweater is buttoned tightly about his neck. As if to add precaution against the infirmities of a battered-down constitution, a red muffler is pinned tightly just under his chin. He is slovenly looking. He doesn't seem interested in any case, but sits through all of them. Tomorrow he will be back again. For three days he's been there.

Seated at the other end of the row is a young energetic policeman. "What are you doing here?" an impudent inquirer demands. "I've a speeding case, a cold-turkey one, too," he answers, and smiles confidently.

Back in one corner of the room stands a tall spindling Negro. He is wearing heavy horn-rimmed glasses. Professor Finney, probably. Gleaning bits of information for the class in criminology.

On the last row is seated a neat-appearing business man. His son, a collegiate youth, fidgets uneasily by his side. Across the aisle a painted girl looks daggers at the youth. He's charged with—anyhow he swears he isn't guilty. It's a frame-up, he confides to his father.

ANOTHER row is filled with Negroes. Some are boisterous, others grim-faced, serious. In the center of the room are two groups of middle-aged women, chatting nervously. They all look like refined clubwomen. Now and then they cast ugly glances at one another. We learn that Mrs. Abbott is prosecuting Mrs. Jergen, her next-door neighbor, because she thinks the latter poisoned her prize Pomeranian.

Two women of ill repute—familiar faces—giggle in the row in front of the clubwomen.

* * * * *

A funny foreign-looking man had just been sentenced to serve a term in the workhouse for selling intoxicating liquor. He didn't seem to mind. In fact, his smile broadened as His Honor pronounced sentence. But a decided change came over his countenance as a bailiff led him to a cell in the hall. He was stockily built and short. So pronounced was his lack of height that his perpendicular and horizontal measurements seemed nearly equal. Yet, he was not fat. Rough-looking, yet good-natured. The blue suit that hung about his body like so many sacks shone like his blunt nose. His head was square; his jaws firm.

IT SEEMS TO ME

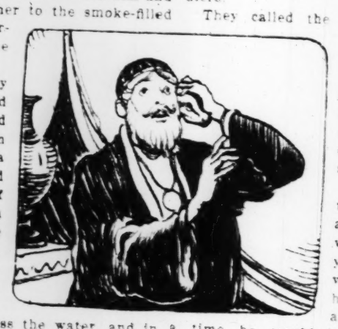
By Heywood Broun

WHEN first I served the King we called him Serge the Gallant, for he was a brave man and eager in all recklessness. Now that he is dead, the story should be told of how he won his lifelong fight against the weighty curse of Fairy Gierson. He would have it known, for as the juices of his body dwindled it was his chief anxiety to be told he had escaped the doom she set. "She lied," he whispered many times in his last agony. "You see she lied. I die on dry land." This was before his fever mounted, for at the end delirium was on him and he spoke obscurely of the ocean.

And, again, the telling serves to batter down a charge or two which ran against the name and fame of my dear master.

SERGE was, you'll find, no craven on the night of our great tribulation in the swamp of Ossa. Fifty years ago we rode three nights away from Kallbra. We left the city and the sea, beloved to the King, to seek out deer and lions in those barren hills beyond Sushini. It was a peasant of that place who told us of the witch and showed us to her cave. I was the youngest of the courtiers, but my Prince chose me to enter with him and we went together to the smoke-filled room, deep-burrowed in the mountain.

He said my fortune should come first, and Fairy Gierson looked within a crystal ball and summoned out of it long life, a son to bear my name and a fair wife. And this much time made good. And there was to be a voyage across the water, and in truth I've taken two. But I protest she spoke false words in dealing with the dark woman who was to cross my path, for I scarcely looked upon that girl and only kissed her once.



Throughout the magic-making the King mocked my solemnity and grinned at Fairy Gierson, blinking in the vapors of her caldron. He had just turned thirty and was minded to make his fortune rather than be told of it. And when she called him to the crystal he said, "Oh, you're not old enough for wisdom, though you have all the ugliness of sages."

At that the witch threw red and yellow peppers in her pot, which blazed at once with purple fire. Under her breath she muttered words which ran in step like marching men. "It is a curse," I cried, and seized him by the arm, but when I spoke she stopped and said, "The charm is done, the thing's wound up."

"And what?" asked Serge the Gallant.

Full into his eyes she peered a minute, even as a cat might look at a King. Out of his own eyes and not the crystal she read this fate: "You will not die on dry land, but death, sharp death and sudden death, awaits you on the water."

He would not let me stab her dead, but paid her gold and went his way. At night we talked within his tent and then he said, "I'll not return to Kallbra."

His councillors were amazed, for they knew nothing of the curse. And Kallbra is a city of the sea.

"From sword or spear I'll die as Kings have died," he said, "but they'll not say a woman killed me."

FOR fifty years he pitched his throne and court in the sun-baked valley of Sushini. When he died his people knew him as Serge the Good. The older name had been forgotten. But I tell you he went away from the mouth of the cave still a gallant King and leader.

I rode beside him in the battle of the swamp against the Oslans, and that was less than a month after the curse of Fairy Gierson. All day we nagged and whittled at those flying horsemen. Under a burning desert sun we fought across a plain which gave no comfort to men or horses. They came upon us thick and furious as particles of a sandstorm, but they could not stand against the anger of our King. Twice they wounded him, but he pressed on, all caked with blood too dry to trickle in that sun.

Night fell and we rode on beyond the borders of the desert. Out of darkness came a moon and on ahead we spied the dust of mounted men.

"FASTER," cried Serge, and spurred on so hard I could not keep the pace. But later I came up to him and found he held his horse close-reined and stared ahead all gaunt and stricken in his horror. He pointed, and I looked and saw broad silver acres.

"Praise God," I cried, "we've got them now. The swamp has blocked them off. They'll have to fight and we can cut them down."

"Water," said the King. "All water."

"Mud, Your Majesty," I told him, but he shook his head and showed me where the silver surface was churned in ripples by the wind.

I'll grant you that, when Serge turned back, the common folk who followed him mistook his motives, and that a kindled panic blazed throughout the army. But twice that night in flight across the desert it was our King who countercharged the enemy and held them back to save his soldiers.

They called the treaty which he signed a coward's peace, but what did Ossa get except Kallbra and another port or so, all useless to our sovereign since the curse.

Serge never took the field again, nor ever went much beyond the cupped valley in which his present palace stood. For a time he would venture into the desert, and during the very years the people called him craven I've watched him stand against a charging lion and bring him down with well-directed arrows. It was a mirage of a lake which made him end these hunting trips.

He must have been well bulwarked against all fear of doom within this valley, for it was nearly always a parched place. Thunder he feared, for when the rains came over the mountains the gutters of the city ran little brooks. Serge fled to his high tower.

PEACE with all the world and fair weather were the things he prized. During the last weeks of his life he endeared himself, for this was the summer of great drought. Crops burned and men and cattle perished. Panic came to all except our sovereign. Serge, almost eighty, dared the strokes and buffets of the blazing sky to go abroad through blistered fields and bring cheer to the hopeless. He alone could smile, within our bitter dry adversity. The nerves of others grew sharp-edged, but Serge showed irritation only once. He was, I thought, a little less than gracious to the Bishop who came to court to pray for rain.

Serge was eighty on the day he died. The sun rode high and hot above the palace on the afternoon that he was stricken. And the drought held tight. The flesh itself of my dear master was as desert sand. Surely, there was no might or power in the witch's curse, for in his last illness he shriveled like the thirsty grain. She lied in her false words of death by water. The sea which roared by Kalibra lay many miles from where the great King died.

Fairy Gierson spoke truly only when she said it should be sudden. On the very afternoon of his last illness Serge was a happy man. A little band came from out of Kalibra to pay him honor on his birthday and testify the loyalty and love of that wave-swept city, now under alien rule.

They brought a gift for memory, picked from the beach where as a lad he played. Tears came to the eyes of Serge. He fondled the pink and pretty shell and laid his cheek beside its cool surface. Then as he touched the conch against his ear he gave a loud and sudden cry before he swooned. "Keep out of the sea," I think he said, and that was wild, but as you know it was a fever killed him.

New York Night

By Bernice Kenyon

I.—OFFICE.

Free of the day's long cant and conference,
Rasping of voices, clatter of machines—
Putting aside a poised and hard pretense,
We step in silence from behind the scenes
Where you and I make money and take stock
Of risk and chance, of loss and heavy winning.
Or build the future on a slippery rock,
Bracing for fabulous ends our fair beginning.

We are the happy and the envied few
Who close our desks upon successful days.
And I could drop for weariness, and you.
Grow grim. . . . And so we take our several ways
Down to the street; and, as we both go out,
Wonder what all this business is about.

II.—HOME.

I slip off daytime like a daytime dress
Dropped to the floor; forsake my tense intent
And troubled haste and lingering tiredness,
And mingle in soft waters carefully blent
Of heat and fragrance. . . . Clothe yourself to be
Some one I know that no one else can find. . .
Take the closed roadster, then, and call for me;
And leave the world and its affairs behind.

I am arrayed in a clinging frock of green
With silver edges. Like a windy leaf
I long to dance and laugh, and of course be seen
Beside you. And what heavenly relief
And light content I'll find in you again!
You're quite superior to other men. . . .

III.—DINNER.

It might be Paris, with the lights this way,
And the delicious quiet, and the food;
But cocktails here are better. . . . Oh, to stay
Forever in this leisure would be good!
Why do we always plan to see a show?
The hundred things we crowd into one night
Must tangle up our brains. . . . My dear, I know
You love these complications of delight.

I've never tasted better caviar
Nor better duck nor half-so-good champagne.
Over the spangled city every star
Moves with a fluttering sparkle, tense and vain
You stare into my eyes, and frown, and frown;
Before your gaze my own must falter down.

IV.—THEATER.

A painted girl, with tilted chin and clear
Provoking laughter, dances from the wings—
Shatters the heavy golden atmosphere—
Whirls on her toes—unhesitating sings
A song whose words had better be left out
(You know the kind of stuff those men invent)
And some may sense just what it's all about,
And some pretend. . . . I wonder what was spent

On that one curtain? . . . Darling, the lobby's full;
Let's take this intermission on the street.
In the cold air. . . . You think the show is dull?
Well, so do I; but then the dancing's sweet. . . .
And music, like a burdening caress,
Tortures my very secret happiness.

V.—SUPPER CLUB.

Where shall we go? Into what slittering snare,
Into what web of music shall we fling
Our eager bodies? Under what new glare
Move to a ritual of posturing?
I love the Russian places, but they spend
Too much of time in singing and knife-throwing;
And then they can't play jazz. . . . You like a blend—
Dark Eastern colors—Scotch and soda flowing.

Then as we dance we'll talk philosophy,
Or sit and watch the gay world growing thin
Against the music's loud intensity—
Against the clamor of our hearts within—
Until, through all the wise things we discuss,
We feel strong silence closing over us.

PRESIDENTS AND BEER

By Alvin H. Goldstein

ELAM RICKEY was talking politics to the bartender in his favorite soft-drink parlor, and sipping a root beer, for which that particular emporium was noted throughout the neighborhood. It was Mr. Rickey's custom, it later developed, to spend two or three evenings a week there, sipping root beers and talking politics. Of course, in the old days, it was easier to get the other fellow's point of view, but this stuff they feed you nowadays——

At any rate, Mr. Rickey, now finishing his fourth glass of root beer, had modified the Volstead law, abolished the amusement tax, had sent the Marines to Mexico and had the situation well in hand. The bartender supplied more root beer on request, after a casual glance toward the door. Another customer edged closer to Mr. Rickey's so-far-solo conversation.

"I believe," said Mr. Rickey, wiping the froth of his fifth root beer from his upper lip, "that Theodore Roosevelt was the greatest President this country ever had." The other customer, who was later identified at the city hospital as Stanley Hallum, suddenly gulped down his half-finished glass of root beer and turned to Mr. Rickey.

"Woodrow Wilson," he said, laconically and effectively.

Elam Rickey was speechless. He could not have been more enraged had he been drinking, instead of root beer, this synthetic stuff you get nowadays.

"Woodrow Wilson was the greatest President," continued Mr. Hallum, "because"—— "He kept us out of war," jeered Mr. Rickey.

"Who passed the Federal reserve law?" Mr. Hallum challenged.

"Who asked you to butt in here, anyway?" answered Mr. Rickey.

"Roosevelt," said Mr. Hallum, "was responsible for a panic in nineteen-hundred-and-something."

"I'll sock you in the eye," argued Elam Rickey. "He was not. Who in the hell are you? Nobody asked you to stick your nose in this."

"THIS is a free country," Mr. Hallum insinuated. "Or it was before the Republicans got a-hold of it."

"Now, gentlemen," said the bartender, "no fightin' in my place or I'll have to call a cop." He smiled at his own little joke. "Have your little arguments, but no fightin'."

"Yeah call a cop," leered Mr. Hallum, eying his empty root-beer glass, and losing a possible ally. "Ha, ha. Call a cop, ha, ha, ha! That's a good one. You shoot off your mouth just like Roosevelt. The Big Stick. Why, if Wilson"——

Pros. Atty.: Your name?
Witness: Elam Rickey.
Pros. Atty.: Where do you live?
Witness: 4932 A—— street.
Pros. Atty.: Now, Mr. Rickey, did you or did you not assault this man on the sixth day of February, this year?
Witness: I did not. He assaulted me.
Pros. Atty.: He did? Tell the Court all about it.
Witness: You see, Judge, it was this way:

* * * * * *

Elam Rickey, as he told the Court afterwards, was taxed beyond all human endurance. He reverted to the policy of Roosevelt aggression, and made a lunge for Mr. Hallum, who warded off Mr. Rickey's blow with his right eye.

The bartender asserted his neutrality by separating the combatants and escorting Mr. Hallum to the door, where, with a deft movement executed by simultaneously raising the foot and stiffening the knee, he assisted Mr. Rickey to the great outdoors.

That done, he resumed his place behind the bar and served Mr. Rickey with another of the now-famous root beers. That root beer was destined never to be drunk. As far as this story is concerned it is standing there yet. Because at this critical moment Mr. Rickey became hungry. He walked to the rear of the room, where the sandwich makings were kept, picked up a large butcher knife and prepared to cut a slice of bread.

THE front door opened suddenly and in walked none other than Stanley Hallum, who, after meditating on the situation outside, had decided that one good blow deserved another. He sighted Mr. Rickey at the rear of the room, and before the peace-loving bartender could interfere, he had rushed back and planted his fist in behalf of the entire Wilson administration on Mr. Rickey's nose.

Mr. Rickey had no time to put down the butcher knife. So he raised it, he told the Judge, above his head and (he thought) out of danger. In some way or other, Mr. Hallum got in the way of the knife and received a nasty cut on his left arm.

"Rank carelessness," according to Mr. Rickey, whose side of the story was heard first at the police station. "Assault and battery," was Mr. Hallum's version, taken at the city hospital. "Damn foolishness," according to the bartender, who was busy explaining things to policemen.

MR. HALLUM and Mr. Rickey filed cross-charges of assault against each other. The case was heard in the Court of Criminal Correction, where they related the foregoing, or their versions of it, to a Judge who was a Roosevelt Republican, but who had voted for Wilson at the second election.

Bound by his political ties, the Judge could do but one thing, and he did it. Mr. Hallum and Mr. Rickey were sentenced to 30 days each in the workhouse, both being found guilty of the other's charge.

"What became of the bartender?" asked the Deputy Sheriff who led Mr. Rickey and Mr. Hallum from the room.

"He got 30 days for the possession of intoxicating liquor, and they closed his place," Mr. Rickey sighed. He turned to Mr. Hallum. "This country," he said, "is going to the dogs."

"To the dogs," echoed Mr. Hallum, and stuck out his right hand. They grasped hands in agreement.

"If only Roosevelt"——

"I was just going to say that Wilson"——

"Come along," said the Deputy Sheriff.

They went.

VI.—STREETS.

This car, informed with unknown destiny,
Drunk with the windy silence of the street,
Flies from an imminent reality,
Seeks and pursues a spectre far more fleet.
We glide enraptured up a long ascent;
The wine that warms us has no earthly savor,
Being infused with some new element;
We cannot analyze its heady flavor.

The pavement shines. The streets lie wide and still.
This is the loneliness all cities hold
When the embattled darkness and the chill
Silence of midnight cover them with cold.
Grimly you drive us through the broken gloom,
Swift a shade that races from its doom.

VII.—DOORWAY.

Oh, speak to me before you say goodnight;
Tell me the world has hurt you . . . Tell me again
You have no other hope, no known delight,
Beyond myself. . . . Your lies sweetly when
The tide of sleep has dulled my and dreams
Pattern the darkness. . . . Say a farewell.
Speak of your love that is not what seems;
Tell me our friends will damn us to hell. . . .

Impulsively I'll kiss you, if
all. . . .
Darling, I do not like this separa
ness;
And yet I wonder is it wise to fall
For men like you? I wonder success
We'd have if you should try to be friend?
Well—take my lips, and that must
the end.

AS A FIREBUG, Mrs. O'Leary's celebrated cow wasn't in it with Mrs. Duncan's cat. That is, if we are to believe the strange tales that have come out of Texas recently about this unfortunate animal. Not long ago the Duncan family of Paris, Texas, was about to go to ruin for want of excitement when the life of the household detected a noise in the kitchen and journeyed thither to investigate. What he saw was an unpalling sight. What seemed in the darkness to be a miniature blazing meteor was scooting about the room leaving a trail of sparks and an odor worse than brimstone, however, but that may or may not be.

This fiery visitor was none other than the family cat, and it was dashing at every door and window in ineffectual efforts to escape. Duncan seized a broom and pounded the beast in hopes of extinguishing the blaze, but that measure, besides being inhumane, was worse than useless. It only excited the cat the more and caused the animal to spring again at a window. This time it held on with its claws for a moment, setting the curtains afire. Still wielding the broom, Duncan made another pass at the cat and broke the window. The cat took prompt advantage of this opportunity and ran from the house, leaving a trail of destruction in its flaming wake. First it ran under the servant's house in the yard and set it afire. Then it dashed into the garage and into the automobile, igniting the tires and upholstery, which blazed with a vengeance while the cat raced around the interior of the garage. The heat was so great that one of the casting of the automobile exploded and the fire spread to the walls of the building. By this time the fire department had arrived and saved the home from destruction, but the servant house and garage were destroyed.

Investigation later disclosed that the cat had become transformed into a fireball. It seems that it was Mrs. Duncan's practice to put a little kerosene in a cup on the stove, where it would be handy for starting the kitchen fire in the morning. The cat, prowling about the place, is believed to have knocked over the cup and spilled the oil on the hot stove and on itself. This caught fire and the trouble started. The next day the cat was found under the remains of the garage. It was dead.

SCIENCE is now about to introduce the man-made hurricane. To drive out the poisonous carbon monoxide produced by the 46,000 automobiles which will pass daily through the new vehicular tunnel now nearing completion beneath the Hudson River, a unique system of ventilation has been devised. Immense electric fans are being installed to drive a 75-mile gale through the seven-foot airway beneath the road. Day and night this hurricane will tear along at a speed greater than that of the fastest vehicles, carrying out the gas of an automobile's exhaust even before the machine itself reaches the outside air. This plan is said to solve the last important engineering problem connected with the great tunnel's construction.

Her color rose. "You're goin' to be married, you said?"

He laughed raggedly. "It has just occurred to me that I couldn't conceive my Mary Wright starting off single-handed to bag a lone bandit. She'd faint at the very thought of it."

"Faintin' down here'd be laughed at." She glanced quickly up at the sun. "Say, it's goin' to be dark pretty quick; did you know it? And I've got you in an awful fix—if you're really not the pusson I thought you."

"Well, I give you my word of honor I'm not."

"I don't know what I can ever do to square myself."

"How far is it to the nearest telephone?"

"You'd have to go to Valentine, I guess. It isn't much further to Kelson."

"You mean I'm 31 miles from any garage?"

"Oh, I'm so sorry!" And the girl with the sun-flooded hair wilted over with her face in her hands. Then she straightened suddenly. "Mister Hobart, will you let me search your car?"

"For what?"

"If I don't find none of the things the bandit took from old Griggs' store I'm going to penalize myself right proper."

"Go as far as you like. Looks as if I'd got to stay here till I find a way to fix that bus."

They began unloading the coupe together. Bedding came out; suit cases and cooking utensils came off. He handed out a five-gallon canteen of lukewarm water, raising an eyebrow at her easy strength in swinging it behind her. Instinctively she sorted out his camping accessories.

"We'd better start a fire," she warned him, "while it's light enough to get the fuel."

"That's right," he agreed. "we had." But he scratched his head. "Out of what?"

"You wait here. I know what to do."

HE WATCHED her stride away down the rocks and up the opposite grade. He dropped idly down on the running board, hammer swinging between his knees. What a pal—such a girl. He couldn't imagine the other Mary Wright saying: "You wait here. I know what to do. I've done it before." Mary Wright, formerly of Paris, Vermont, would now be sitting helplessly up in this car, whimpering over their predicament.

Mary Wright of Kelson, Arizona, came back limping. But her arms were loaded with rakish roots from which the sand still sifted—a load for a man, by the way. "Fire them," she ordered. "They'll burn for hours."

She found pancake flour, mixed it in a twinkling, flipped the griddles dextrously, all the time squatting beside that spicy, crackling blaze. Coffee boiled. Bacon sizzled. She cooked their meal and they ate it together by the stranded car. The stillness shrieked at their eardrums.

"It is nice out here, isn't it?" the girl drawled languidly, leaning back against the machine. "Reckon I never noticed it in quite this way before."

"I know why this trip has been tiring me so," he blurted. "I've been driving it alone."

"Yes. Reckon it is nicer to have company along."

He lighted a brier. Never had shag tobacco tasted so delectable. "You can't go walking 31 miles anywhere in the dark, Miss Wright," he said suddenly.

"Land's sake, did you think I meant to? I'm not afeerd o' stayin' out all night. I do it half the year, lookin' after my ranch. What's the matter with you? What you all fussed up about?"

"Well, back in my part of the country people might think the situation"——

"Would they? Folks down here are sensible. Pshaw! I ain't afeered o' companyin' you till mawnin'."

She was like her Yavapai County—big, open, frank, artless.

BOB sprang up and stalked away. In one vast, overwhelming revelation he knew what he wanted. And Fate had brought him 3000 miles across great America to show it to him.

The stars came out—desert stars—great low-hung flares of yellow incandescence. The burnt orange and old rose of the mountains faded. A cold wind stirred the greasewood. Night was upon them.

The man looked up directly overhead. The Milky Way came steadily into its own. How high it was! How vast, beautiful, terrific, was the world which God had made!

Ghostly hoots began sounding off at their left, like moans of phantoms that were haunting that basin. "Those are owls, aren't they?" the man whispered. And the woman nodded. Her face was cupped by her hands as she sat cross-legged before the coals. Brown-topaz eyes were copper now, her silhouetted head a tracing of infinite grace. Slowly, slowly, the embers died.

"I'll go out to the trail in the mawnin' an' pay someone to come in here and tow you to Kingman," she promised him.

"NEVER mind the morning. I don't want to think there's ever to be a morning. I've read about nights under desert stars. Now I know what"——

"But I've heard New England is a whole lot prettier. It's really awful common down here—just sand and mountains and mesas and sky. I've dreamed a lot o' what New England must be like: hills and trees and little old crooked lanes and old-fashioned houses and well-sweeps—and Paisley shawls. My mother had a Paisley shawl. My uncle fetched it from Boston. You ever been to Boston?"

"Heavens! I know Boston like a fellow knows his pockets."

"Then—you've really seen the ocean?"

"Seen it! I've lived beside it whole summers at a time. I've bathed in it, fished in it, crossed portions of it twice"——

"What's it like?" She picked thoughtfully at her palms. "I was born and raised right here in Yavapai. I went to St. Louis once, though, and saw the Mississippi. Is the ocean like the Mississippi?"

He told her about the gruff old Atlantic, and the night around them deepened, deepened till little foxlike barks, faint at first, grew plainer on the south.

"You better unlock your toolbox and give me my guns," she suggested. "We don't want no varmints gettin' into our grub along toward mawnin'."

ON EITHER side of that campfire, the fanning embers between them, they stretched themselves after a while. The chill night grew as numbing as the day had been hot. Triple hoots of the tiny owls came from the crags of ebony nothingness around them. The coyote barks sounded off toward the west and then worked around to the north. Now and then a coal leaped up in a little ripple of flame, yellow as a hen's foot. A rakish wisp of dried greasewood stirred. Within 31 miles was no human thing.

"Asleep, Miss Wright?"

"No. I'm watchin'—the stars—and thinkin' o' what you been tellin' me about New England. And I wish you'd call me Mary. Makes me feel you just ain't friendly to talk so formal."

"You want to see the ocean badly—M-M-Mary?"

"It'd be a dream come true."

"M-M-Mary?"

"Uh-huh."

"Fate directed me here, Mary, all the long way from Vermont, just to linger in this lonely desert basin with you."

He raised himself and glanced across what remained of their fire. She lay on her back, one arm thrown up to pillow her head. He could see her profile, clear-cut as a cameo.

"Mary?"

"What, Mister Robert?"

"Do you know how many men back East, grinding their lives out in factories and shops, long for the kind of women who'll rough it with them in this glorious way—bedded down on warm earth—beside a dying campfire—looking up at the desert stars?"

He heard her voice come faintly, "And do you know how many Western women long fo' the kind o' menfolks who can see any romance lyin' on warm earth beside a dyin' camp fire, and notice desert stars at all? I been stretched here thinkin' o' that, too."

He said hoarsely: "I'm beginning to believe—I've been wasting myself—on the wrong Miss Wright."

After a time she answered: "Ever since I looked in your chuck box I been entertainin' some such thoughts myself!"

ICY winds of desert morning blew the Spanish thorn and greasewood. Owl hoots had quieted and the coyote yaps died away utterly. The embers of their first camp fire had died to gray and then lampblack long before an eery light began diluting the eastern sky-line. Six miles northward the Sunset Limited from Chicago to Los Angeles crawled—a child's toy train—across a wasted world.

The sweep of pearly gray along the east grew slowly into henna, apricot, and yellow. Mary Wright, of neither Vermont nor Pasadena, came awake.

"Whatever are you up to?" she demanded.

Bob Hobart crunched his sixth wrapping of tissue paper and cast it aside as he bent beneath his engine hood.

"You set out to capture a man, didn't you? I'd say you succeeded. I'm screwing in new spark plugs so you can take him wherever you want him—and sentence him for life!"

Mrs. Dumbly

"But if you get a pair of shoes to go under the galoshes, what will you do when you want to wear your gray shoes and your black satin shoes and your tan suedes and all the others?"

"Artie Dumbly!" I cried, stung to fury by his utter lack of reason. "Do you suppose for a minute that I'm going to wear those galoshes every time I go out this month?"

"But you said you needed them to keep you warm, didn't you?" he insisted.

"Artie! Artie!" I said, my voice trembling so with anger that I could hardly control it, "I will not answer that question! And I tell you for the last time that I will not quarrel in public! I expected to have a happy Saturday afternoon looking at galoshes and now you've ruined it all! It's all ended in a scene! I won't buy a thing! I won't buy galoshes or any sandals, but when I catch cold and die you'll find that my funeral expenses will cost a lot more than galoshes would!"

And I simply went off to another place to buy galoshes and left him to explain to the shoe clerk. I hate quarreling in public.

first ascertaining whether or not someone is inside taking a nap."

"My eyes are poor, but I would rather get a job as a night watchman in a dynamite factory than move back into that apartment," said the second millionaire with a shudder. "But tell me about yourself. What brings you abroad?"

"Mine is a story equally tragic," said the first millionaire slowly. "I left my apartment because it is contaminated with saxophobia. I guess you know what saxophobia is. The symptoms are wandering feet. Well, there is more music in my apartment than in Tin Pan Alley.

"The place looks something like this:

Mulcahy.	Bingham.
Leffingwell.	McSlough.
Iskivitz.	Tinker.
Gooley.	Johnson.
Callahan.

"THEY installed us on the shelf between the Tinkers and the Johnsons. The Tinkers have two daughters who are always practicing the newest gallop, and the Johnsons are in vaudeville as a roller-skating team and practice their act every night in their parlor.

"Reading from left to right, Mulcahy chins himself on a saxophone. Mrs. Leffingwell chirps. The Iskivitzes play kazoos. Gooley mangles a guitar. Callahan coughs a cornet. The Binghams annoy a piano. McSlough has a radio. Tinker has banging radiators, and old man Johnson has a bad cold.

"I tell you, the perpetual music in that apartment would shame a Chinese New Year's. Once I grabbed my automatic and was going up to fifth-floor-east to assassinate Mulcahy, but my wife stopped me, saying that musical genius runs in their family. He would certainly run if I ever got a hold of him.

"One of the Gooley kids plays the 'Pilgrims' Chorus' on the piano. Regularly each afternoon, the Pilgrims do their stuff and I take a pilgrimage around the block.

"'George,' my wife will say, 'I see it's five o'clock. There goes the "Pilgrims' Chorus."'

"WE USED to regulate our lives by the time that kid played the piano. There is competition between the 'Pilgrims' Chorus' and 'Memphis Mamie' from upstairs, and I have frequent nightmares of a bunch of black-hooded pilgrims snapping their fingers and doing the Charleston.

"A man has as much privacy as the Prince of Wales. 'George,' my wife will say, 'I see the Iskivitzes have calves' liver and onions for supper. There's an east wind blowing.' And, 'George,' my wife will say, 'I'm not going out tonight because I think the McSlough's are going to run their radio set.'"

The miserable millionaire was unable to resume his narrative as the tears choked his voice. "I'm not going back," he shouted desperately. "I'll stay here and congeal first."

"Nor me either," said the second millionaire. "Shake."

"Where will we spend the rest of the evening?" asked the first millionaire. "How about running over to the art museum? We can go down to the Egyptian room and bunk with the mummies."

"They won't mind," said the second, "they're all wrapped up in themselves anyway."

Wearily the poor millionaires kicked away the newspapers which they had been wearing as additional upholstery. And as these two poor, homeless creatures trudged through the blinding snow they reflected that the housing situation affords much room for speculation but not much room for the public.

In Court

On his face black whiskers stood out like porcupine quills.

As the bailiff led him from the court his expression became saddened, as if he was smitten with the thought of a sudden calamity. The bailiff didn't return for five minutes. When he did he fairly shook with laughter. Five minutes more. Ten minutes. Still the bailiff shook. A fellow bailiff approached him.

"It must have been a good one," said he.

"The season's best," the laughing one returned. And he told the story:

"'REMEMBER that fellow I took back to the cell? Man, he nearly cried on my shoulder. Wanted to know if he couldn't go home until tomorrow morning. Promised he'd come back. What do you suppose he wanted to do? Here's what he said:

"'Mister officer, can't you let me out of here until tomorrow? Don't say no. Let me explain. My daughter, Alice, will be so disappointed. Every month, mister officer, on the first Wednesday, I take my little Alice to her meeting. It's clear across town. She can't go alone.'

"'Play another record,' I told him. 'Your Alice doesn't have to go to any meeting.' He insisted that she did. Furthermore, he must take her.

"'She has to get there,' he told me. 'Why, all month she's been practicing the songs her group sings tonight. They're all fine ones, mister officer. One of them goes like this: "We're loyal"——

"'Pipe down, silly,' I said. 'I'm not interested in those songs.'

"'Now you know she can't miss that meeting. Not when she's been going over that song since last month. And, anyway, she has such a good time with all the other girls. And those women, mister officer, she likes all those women so much. They are mighty good women. I'm for 'em.'

"'Say, Willie,' I asked him, 'what sort of an affair is this that your little Alice can't miss?'"

The fat bailiff lapsed into another fit of laughter. When he had recovered enough to speak, he quoted:

"'It's the temp'rance meeting, mister officer. The Loyal Temp'rance Soldiers.'"

"The Ambush," which is reproduced upon the cover of this issue of the Post-Dispatch Sunday Magazine, is the work of Frank Tenney Johnson, one of a group of the painters of the Far West. Against a high blue western sky, across which scud specks of cirrus cloud, the Indian leader of the ambush stands on a little mound, astride his pony. In misty amethystine hills is suggested the background, a little arroya in which the shapes of the Indians in the ambuscade are hinted. The picture is reproduced by courtesy of the Newhouse Galleries.

The Outline of the Arts, by H. G. WELLS

1—The First Fifty Thousand Years

Comparable to His "Outline of History" Is This New "Outline of the Arts" by the Distinguished English Author, H. G. Wells. His First Article of the Series Describes Ancient Man as Builder and Artist.

AFTER age-long struggle man arose from the condition of a wandering rare animal to the multitudinous, toilsome, but secured and more abundant life of civilization. For a fortunate minority civilization meant great releases of energy; for all it meant a certain freedom from urgent fear and necessity. And the released energy flowed into a prolongation of "play" into the adult life and into a conscious search for delights. Man ceased to be wholly occupied in the search for food and shelter. He lifted his eyes to beauty. Even the Neanderthal animal was not wholly a beast. It collected shells and curious stones and suchlike odd things and wore them, it would seem, for pleasure and adornment.

In the later Paleolithic time there was a considerable outbreak of drawing and carving. These things were done for pleasure. No doubt they also had a magic significance; that was inevitable. There is an incurable tendency in the human mind to overload things with personal significance. To this day people feel that jewels or ornaments are lucky or unlucky and no doubt Paleolithic man thought that his drawings of animals had a propitious effect on the game. But some of his statuettes were manifestly burlesque. Much stress has been laid on the fact that a great proportion of the Paleolithic paintings and drawings that have survived are in dark caves and obscure corners. But these may be only a small remnant of the decoration with which early man covered the trees and rocks of his time. The exposed would have been destroyed naturally in a few years.

THE EGYPTIAN SPHINX and pyramids.

—Later Paleolithic man drew and carved; he danced, as his drawings testify, and dancing seems to imply rhythmic shoutings and beatings. Here are the first factors of fine art and music. The shelters that he built and the huts and holes of early Neolithic man were, however, sternly utilitarian; it was only as civilization dawned and a considerable accumulation of population was achieved that the shrine and the head-man's hut began to be something more than mere shelters and conscious architecture began. Insensibly men came to feel that a building might have dignity and mystery, might impress by its grace and beauty.

Perhaps the most considerable building efforts Stone-Age man ever made were the barrows in which great men were interred. Always there was a central chamber of big piled stones and then earth or mud brick. The great pyramids of Egypt—those vast graceless bulks—are essentially huge barrows of stone. Silbury Hill, in England, is an earth pyramid. These accumulations were oriented with great care; the Egyptian pyramids indicate considerable mechanical skill, as well as a stupendous mass effort; but one can scarcely speak of architecture in connection with these piles.

THE architects of the Mesopotamian region and those of the Nile Valley began with very little knowledge of each other's activities and had little or no influence upon each other. Their first forms were in each case determined by the peculiarities of sun-dried mud bricks and timber.

The Sumerian, however, had little stone available; the Egyptian, on the other hand, had abundant and various stones close at hand, easily quarried and easily got to the Nile. Sun-dried bricks are compressible. They necessitate a broadening-out of the walls at the base, and both the Sumerian-Babylonian and the Egyptian buildings have that sloping of the outer wall that gives them their distinctive air of dignified permanence. The inner passages were narrow because of the yet unmastered difficulties of carrying a roof. In Sumeria the important buildings developed into the "ziggurat" form which continued to be characteristic of this region. A ziggurat is a staged many-storied building; each story is narrower than the one below and has a terrace about it with staircases. The softer brick is faced with tiles and harder burnt brick. The remains we now excavate in these regions are only the stumps of the original buildings, which often towered to seven or eight stories.

Pillars were rarely or never used in the earlier Mesopotamian architecture — there was no suitable material — and the chambers seem generally to have been vaulted not with arches but with each course of bricks on the massive wall coming in a little more than the one below. Decorative effects were got with buttresses and brick panels. Stucco and terra cotta play a large part in the ornamental work. Stone appears in carved slabs.

It is only when we come to Assyrian architecture that we come into a stone region and the buildings begin to be faced with stone masonry and freely adorned with stone. It is only when communications have developed with Egypt in the second millennium B. C. that the stone pillar appears in the Euphrates-Tigris region.

THE Egyptian architecture never produced many-storied piles of the ziggurat type. Except the pyramids, obelisks and pylons, Egyptian architecture kept broad and low. The stone appears first as a substitute for wood, stone lintels and beams replacing wooden ones and imitating their shapes. Wooden supports gave place to rounded pillars of stone, upon which pillars the forms of men and animals are presently painted or carved in relief. One early temple, the temple of the Sphinx, near to and contemporary with the pyramids, is largely carved out of the living rock. It has no columns. Columns and colonnades appear about the time of the Twelfth Dynasty.

The great days of the Egyptian style were in the time of that Eighteenth Dynasty. To that period we owe the huge assembly of temple buildings at Thebes. The Nineteenth Dynasty was also a great dynasty of builders.

Sculpture and painting were at first entirely accessory to the master art of architecture in both centers of civilization. Sculpture began as relief and as the carved pylon; painting filled the panel and covered the blank wall. To the dry Egyptian climate we owe the preservation of great spaces of wonderfully painted surface, representing a thousand aspects of everyday Egyptian life and revealing much of the thought and imagination of these people. The records of Assyria and Babylon are sparing in comparison.

The Aegean architecture has a distinctive quality of its own; but, on the whole, it is closer to the Egyptian than to the Babylonian in spirit. Pillars are used early and the buildings have a labyrinthine arrangement quite different from either Egyptian or Babylonian plans. Fresco painting and mosaic were carried to a very high level in the Aegean cities.

WHILE these three great arts developed there was also in all these civilizations an enormous output of gems, goldsmiths' work and other metal work, small statuettes, models and suchlike graceful furnishings. Wood and ivory carving were beautifully done. Crete was particularly productive of beautiful gold work and of pottery. The Cretan vases were traded all over the ancient Orient.

Imaginative literature and music do not seem to have been so highly developed in the ancient civilizations as the arts that appeal to the eye. Tale telling has been an important living thing in human life since speech began, and the most important elements of prose literature, a sense of phrase, invention, character study, are to be found wherever two or three women of any race gossip together. Dreams, very often monstrous and embodying the reactions against the necessary suppressions of primitive society, supplied a fantastic element in the early tale.

Tales have always eked themselves out by dramatic gestures and interludes except among the very coldest and most restrained people, and from an early age the memory of great events, the procedure of great occasions, was sustained by periodic narrative dances, in which speech and chant, imitation, rhythmic movement and instrumental sound were inextricably interwoven.

These things were in human life before civilization, and the familiar forms of story and sketch and homely dance went on, no doubt, among the common folk of the ancient civilizations when the periodic commemorations were exalted to become the ceremonial of the temples. But though the priests took up various systems of legends—the creation story, for example—and expanded many of the primitive fables into a complex mythology, they do not seem to have cast them into molds of beautiful language. The spectacle was the thing. Neither in Egypt nor in Babylonia was there any serious development of the drama as such. The peasants had their show, perhaps; but no one else heeded it.

The possible dramatic developments of the Aegean peoples we do not yet understand sufficiently to discuss. Perhaps they had no drama. They had exhibitions of a crueller, intenser interest. The bullfight was their common entertainment. The probably kindred Etruscans, like the pre-European American civilizations, entertained themselves by butchering slaves and making captives fight for life before them.

DRAWINGS of animals by Paleolithic man.

The writer is unable to discover any record at all of professional story tellers or story chanters in the life of these old civilizations, even in the village life. If there were no professional memorizers, then until the art of writing had developed there could be little expansion of literary art. People would have flashes of happy expression, but they would not be preserved to grow into a literary method and tradition. The earliest Egyptian writings seem to be charms and other recipes, moral aphorisms, bare records. The people of both Egypt and Sumeria probably took themselves for granted to an amazing extent and after childhood indulged very rarely in wonder or dreams of adventure. They were simple practical peoples. Even about death the Egyptians were astoundingly practical. They furnished forth the dead with care and comfort. The greatest Egyptian tale was the story, told with a hundred variations, of the journey of the departed soul to Osiris. It was a simple, moral, unmetaphysical Baedeker of the other world, the Book of the Dead.

The Jews were yet to develop their book, the first book of power in the world, the Bible, which, as we shall tell, effected a synthesis of many of the shattered elements of the old Semitic world. The Aryans were reciting in their woodlands, but they had not learned to write down the tales and hymns of their singers.

In all the ancient world music never became detailed and an art in itself; it was always ancillary to chant or dance. Ancient music had rhythm, had melody; but it had no harmonies. It was shouted or banged or blown more or less in unison. Women and youths sang an octave higher than the men. Stamping, hand-clapping, primitive drumming helped. This is true also of the Jewish and Greek music up to the beginnings of the Christian era. Arab music still knows nothing of harmony. The music consists of rhythmical cadences with a rather monotonous melody.

Just as literature in the ancient world was unable to develop to the full because of the imperfect development of writing, so music was restrained by the want of a practicable notation. Men had much the same ears and imaginations then as now, but they could not keep hold of the subject or hand on their achievements to supply fresh points of departure to their successors.

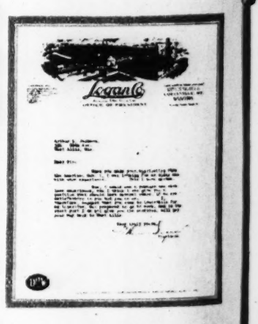
Got Him Draftsman's Job

"I wanted to let you know how I came out in getting that job at the Brownell Co., Dayton, Ohio. I was to start and have a trial at Drawing, and I am still in the Drawing room. The engineers seem to like the work I make, and also the other draftsmen. I thank the School very much for getting me in at this place, because your letter of recommendation helped me a whole lot to get the job."

BERNARD WEBER, 730 St. Nicholas Av., Dayton, Ohio.



CITY OF CHICAGO. Department of Buildings, Room 702, City Hall. Robert Knight, Deputy Commissioner.

Gentlemen: The same day I received my diploma I got word that I was one of the two candidates who had successfully passed the examination for Deputy Commissioner of Buildings of the City of Chicago, a position paying $3000 per year.

There were eight applicants examined besides myself, all men well known to the architectural and engineering profession. Seven of these failed to obtain a passing grade of 70 per cent. My grade was 84.62.

Inasmuch as I failed to pass this same examination three years before, my present success is mainly due to the knowledge gained through your School.

Yours very truly, ROBERT KNIGHT.

My Hair Was Quite Gray
"Only a short time ago my hair was quite gray. It was falling out. My scalp itched and dandruff appeared. Kolor-Bak stopped the itching, dandruff and falling. Most wonderful of all, however, is that my hair is its natural shade. I look 10 years younger."
The above is typical of the letters received from users of Kolor-Bak, the clean, colorless liquid that restores the natural shade to any gray hair.
Kolor-Bak is a combination of ingredients which act as a substitute for the natural pigmentation of the hair. And strange as it may seem, it restores the former appearance to any gray hair, no matter whether it was black, brown, reddish or blonde before it turned. For that reason it isn't necessary to do any testing of Kolor-Bak on a sample of your hair. Results usually appear in a week.
You will be overjoyed to see how quickly the gray comes and you see the grayness gone and your hair soft, silky, beautiful. Dandruff and itching also disappear. Its action is so satisfactory.

VAN ESS Legend Scalp Massage

Costs Nothing

Unless we grow hair. The Van Ess 3-bottle Treatment is absolutely guaranteed. The warrant is given by your own dealer. All we require is his signature showing you have purchased a ninety-day treatment. If it fails we refund your money. You assume no risk making this test.

FALLING hair stopped—new hair grown in 90 days! This is to offer you under written guarantee the treatment that does it.

If the treatment fails it costs you nothing. Your own Drug or Department Store gives you our guarantee. Hence, no risk on your part.

Tested by 300,000 Women

More than 300,000 women have made this test. Results are amazing. The charm of glorious hair is now available to any woman who desires to have it.

The Infected Sebum in Your Hair

Sebum is an oil. It forms at the follicles of the hair. Its natural function is to lubricate the hair. But frequently it becomes infected, cakes on the scalp, clogs the follicles and plugs them.

Germs by the millions breed in it, then feed on the hair. Soon your hair begins falling, loses life and lustre.

New Life to Hair

Remove the Sebum and a wonderful change takes place. The hair takes on new life, new brilliancy and softness. It stops falling. New growth generally begins.

A little regular use of the Van Ess treatment will show you this. The new method penetrates to the follicles of the hair, combats the Sebum and removes it. Marvelous results. Hair stops falling. New hair begins to grow in 90 days. We know you will doubt it, so we guarantee it.

At Our Risk

In justice to yourself, give this new treatment a fair trial. Since you take no risk, it is folly not to try it.

Go to any Drug or Department Store today. Ask for the Van Ess 90-day treatment. Written guarantee accompanies it.

A joyful and a welcome drink to serve when good friends call

AN EVENING of bridge. . . . Good friends and a good run of luck. . . . The usual quips and merry jest. . . . And then along about ten o'clock a sparkling bottle of "Canada Dry," with sandwiches or crackers and cheese. . . . You just can't beat that combination to top off an enjoyable evening.

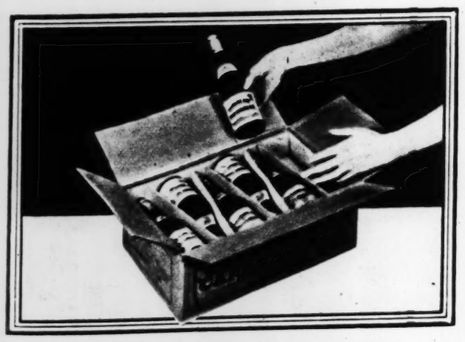
Your guests will enjoy this fine old ginger ale and you will have a much more enjoyable time, too, than if you prepared something unnecessarily elaborate.

No fussy preparations in the kitchen to take you from your guests. No worrying about this and that. No fear that everything will not turn out just right.

That's the delightful thing about serving "Canada Dry" when you entertain. It is easy to get ready and you know it is a drink that everybody likes.

Best of all, it adds a certain rare charm and distinction to any occasion. In purity, in quality, in the witchery of its wonderful flavor, it is, indeed, "The Champagne of Ginger Ales."

Try it soon. It is as welcome and invigorating these crisp winter days as in the hottest days of summer.



TRY THIS DELICIOUS DOZEN

A new way of packing "Canada Dry." Ideal for home use. Twelve bottles in a substantial carton. You will be especially glad to have it handy when friends drop in unexpectedly, for the dance, for dinner, for a refreshing bedtime snack. This Special Hostess Package is sold by all "Canada Dry" dealers.

HERE ARE TWO NEW RECIPES FOR YOU TO TRY

"Canada Dry" Fruit Lemonade

A most refreshing beverage may be prepared by combining the juices of ½ lemon and 1 orange. Stir in a dessert spoon of powdered sugar. Add 1 bottle of "Canada Dry" and serve with slice of orange and maraschino cherry in glass with cracked ice. (Sufficient for two persons.)

"Canada Dry" Sunshine Punch

Boil 2 cups of sugar and 1 cup of water to a syrup and cool. Add the juice of 6 oranges and 6 lemons. Pour in punch bowl over cake of ice and add 4 bottles of "Canada Dry" and 1 quart of charged water. Serve at once. (This makes 12 sherbet glasses.)

Spring strikes an entirely new note in ADAPTO footwear. Yesterday's styles are obsolete. The new mode has already become the vogue.

The colors have changed. The shapes have changed. But ADAPTO'S assurance of foot comfort and perfect fit remains, as always, the same.

REM "demonstrates" too

Shows this salesman what a good cough medicine can do

A salesman needs his voice. Especially an automobile salesman. There are so many good points to tell a prospective customer that one doesn't want to be interrupted every few minutes by annoying coughing spells.

Mr. James P. Smith of 3238 Tracy Ave., Kansas City, found that out last winter. But he also found out how helpful REM can be in getting rid of a cough.

Mr. Smith often turns the "wheel" over to a customer and says "Try it for yourself." That's what he says now about REM:

"I was with the Rainbow Division (42nd) and was gassed in France," says Mr. Smith. "It left me with a tender throat and very susceptible to coughs. My present work demonstrating cars gets me out in all sorts of weather and every once in a while I'll get a cough from it.

"Last winter I had one that was a humdinger. It had me coughing most of the time till I started to take Rem. That relieved me right away, in fact it's the quickest-acting cough medicine I've ever used.

"I got Rem from Mr. Nordberg the druggist at Cypress & Independence Ave. He seemed to think pretty well of it too."

So many who have tried REM speak of the quick relief it brings.

This quick action is largely due to a special ingredient — effective, harmless — not found in ordinary cough syrups. Clinging to your throat as it is swallowed, REM quickly begins its work of quieting your cough.

No Opiates in REM. And pleasant to take.

Ask your druggist for REM—the blue package with the round orange label. If it doesn't help you, you can have your money back. Fair enough!

MISS ELINOR PATTERSON made a brilliant debut in Chicago Society a year ago. Although she enjoyed this gaiety for a time, she determined to realize an ambition she has held since ten years of age, to become an actress. After one short season of study in a dramatic school she was chosen by Morris Gest to play the part of "The Nun, Megildis" (shown in oval) in "The Miracle," now touring the middle west, a part which she plays with great sympathy and true artistic talent.

talks on the care of the skin

MISS ELINOR PATTERSON of Chicago, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Medill Patterson, who has made a conspicuous success this season as "The Nun," in "The Miracle," is an exquisitely beautiful young girl whose red-gold hair throws an aureole around a face which is fair with the flush of unfolding youth.

IN a recent interview Miss Patterson emphasized the importance of giving the skin the utmost care. Her life, which combines society with the serious profession of the theatre, puts a double strain upon her natural beauty.

When asked how this strain can be overcome, Miss Patterson replied:—"For the skin which is doubly taxed by society and professional life and which must be kept clear, fresh and free from weariness, Pond's Two Creams are perfect. So fragrant and pleasant of texture. And," she added, "so sure in fulfillment."

The Two Creams the younger set is using

Pond's is the method followed by beautiful young girls everywhere whose position in the social world exacts that in spite of hectic lives they shall keep the youthful freshness of their skin.

POND'S Cold Cream should be used to give the skin a thorough cleansing several times each day and before retiring. Pond's Vanishing Cream for a soft, smooth finish, a powder base, and protection against the weather, should be used after each of the daytime cleansings. Both Creams come in two sizes of jars and tubes. Try this excellent method yourself. The Pond's Extract Company, 131 Hudson Street, New York City.

It's the scurry of their active feet . . that hurries up the shoe bills

Thirty-five years have taught us a lot about making shoes for boys and girls

HUMAN dynamos! Where healthy youngsters get their boundless supply of energy sometimes passes all understanding. And how they do "go through" a pair of shoes!

But—maybe the shoes are largely to blame. There's something wrong when seams rip, leather breaks or soles go flap-flapping before your pocketbook has recovered from its latest trip to the shoe store.

Here are shoes that are shoes

Try Endicott-Johnson shoes. See what a difference there can be in shoes. We specialize in shoes for active feet. Never in our thirty-five years' experience have we lost sight of the fact that shoes for boys and girls should be different from those for grown-ups. That leather must be specially tanned to make it tough and strong—and good-looking too. And that the development of growing feet must be considered.

Endicott-Johnson shoes embody all these considerations. When we design a type of shoes, we test them. Put them on actual boys and girls. Watch for possible weaknesses. Remedy them. See that designs are right. Then, step by step, we build into them wear, comfort and style.

We tell our workers what these shoes must do. We give them special incentives to put their best workmanship into every pair. They know what you expect. They have an interest in seeing you buy these shoes time after time. They do make better shoes for men and women, as well as for boys and girls.

Prove the quality of these shoes yourself

See them. Examine them. Try them on your children. Compare them with shoes you've bought before. Consider the extremely reasonable prices.* Sold by 50,000 stores. Scores of styles—for school, dress and play. Beautiful patterns. Handsome finishes. Comfortable shapes.

There is almost certain to be a store in your neighborhood selling Endicott-Johnson shoes. If you don't happen to know where it is, write us.
